Rebels to Sink Russian Ships Aiding Rivals, Europe Hears

Loyalists, Pushed Back, Plan to Move Capital to Barcelona.

Neutrality Group Will Meet Today

By the Associated Press.

Fascist rebel armies laid siege to Madrid last night and forced government armies back toward the capital.

Retreating from one town after another, the government defenders dug in at Mostoles, 10 miles from the heart of the capital, and in Torrejon de la Calzada, 13 miles from the city.

Torrejon is on a divergent highway out of Madrid between the capital city and Illescas, also held by rebels.

With Madrid besieged, the rebel high command was reported to have ordered its warships to sink Russian vessels believed transporting arms to the loyalists.

Other European nations were notified of this order, the unconfirmed reports said.

Government leaders, it was reported, had decided to move the capital to Barcelona, where President Manuel Azana and three high cabinet officials already have set up offices.

Demand For Pact.

With this development, government leaders said, the Madrid forces would be able to make the civil war drag on indefinitely, in the hope that sympathetic nations such as Russia eventually might offer concrete military aid.

Within Madrid, leaders installed a new supreme military chief and rushed a civilian reserve army of 100,000 to the front. Gen. Jose Asensio was relieved of command, and the 60-year-old Gen. Sebastian Pozas was put in his place.

Pozas, the war ministry announced, was a tactical expert with long experience in military campaigns.

Meanwhile, with Europe awaiting the meeting in London today of the non-intervention committee, diplomatic sources in Paris last night thought Italy had promised to help Germany seek a Franco-German pact.

These sources reported Italian Foreign Minister Count Galeazzo Ciano, now in Berlin, and German Foreign Minister Konstantin von Neurath had agreed such a pact was desirable and were asserted to have agreed it should be guaranteed by Italy and Great Britain.

Accord Is Reported.

Earlier Germany and Italy were authoritatively reported to have reached an accord on their stand in the Spanish civil war.

The non-intervention committee was called to hear the German, Italian and Portuguese replies to Russian charges of aiding Spanish insurgents.

The German note already has been received, denying Russian allegislations and making counter-charges of Russian arms shipments to Spain.

The Italian note, containing similar denials and accusations, was to be handed to Lord Plymouth, committee chairman, before the session, scheduled for 4 p. m. (11 a. m. E. S. T.).

The Portuguese note was en route last night.

Informed quarters expressed belief the Russian representatives would wait only long enough to hear the neutrality counter-charges delivered, and then would bolt the pact summarily.

In Moscow, however, authoritative sources said British and French pressure might delay Russian withdrawal.

Wear Swastika Badges.

Northwich, Cheshire, England, Oct. 22 (AP).—An English college student, bombing pilot for the Spanish government during the civil war, said tonight German officers flying for the Spanish Fascists "don't even take the trouble to hide their swastika badges."

The student, John Wilson, here for a few days before returning to the Spanish war front, left the University of Liverpool to go to Spain, where he said he had been lying 11 weeks. Not only Germans but also Italian pilots fighting for Spanish Fascists wear uniforms of their own countries, Wilson asserted.

Mrs. Jenkins Injured Seriously As Horse Bolts at Warrenton

MRS. BETTY WILLETS JENKINS.

Former Debutante, 19, Hurled From Cart, Is Brought to Washington Hospital; Doctor Describes Her Condition as 'Satisfactory.'

Hurled from her cart when a horse she was training bolted, Mrs. Betty Willets Jenkins, 19 years old, of Warrenton, Va., and prominent socially, suffered undetermined injuries yesterday.

After treatment at Fauquier County Hospital at Warrenton, Mrs. Jenkins was brought to Emergency Hospital late last night. She was being attended by Dr. John H. Lyons, who pronounced her condition "satisfactory."

The accident occurred on the grounds of Nordix Farm, Mrs. Jenkins' estate near Warrenton, as she was breaking a young horse to harness.

Reports from Warrenton indicated that she was first believed to have suffered a fracture of a vertebra near the base of the brain. She also suffered severe scalp wounds.

Mrs. Jenkins is the wife of E. Kenneth Jenkins, noted polo player. She made her debut in New York in 1934 and is well known in Washington.

Elect Landon For 'Sane' Rule, Al Smith Urges

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Oct. 22.—Alfred E. Smith, former Democratic candidate for President, tonight continued his attack on the New Deal, urging voters to cast their vote November 3 "in a manner that will give a sane, orderly government under Gov. Landon of Kansas."

Smith's statement was made at the close of his speech at the Civic Opera House before a capacity crowd which Francis X. Busch, chairman of the arrangements committee, said numbered 4,000. It was his second open declaration for the Republican Presidential candidate. He previously had announced in his Carnegie Hall speech in New York he would support Landon.

Pittsburgh Next.

His attack on the Roosevelt Administration tonight was directed chiefly at the President's fiscal policies.

Smith's speech, the third he has made during the campaign, was broadcast over a Nation-wide hookup. He will go from here to Pittsburgh, where he speaks Saturday night.

After reciting the part he and other Jeffersonian Democrats played in the 1932 campaign in support of President Roosevelt, he said:

"They are out on a limb today, holding the bag, driven out of the party, because some new bunch that nobody ever heard of in their life before came in and took charge of things and started planning everything."

Speaking of the Government debt, he said it would take 65,000 years to pay off the $34,000,000,000 now owed by the Government if it were at the rate of $1 a minute.

He also struck at the centraliza-

President Back After Brief Trip To New England

Roosevelt Tells Throngs in Connecticut Prosperity Has Returned.

By the Associated Press.

President Roosevelt returned to Washington last midnight from his automobile campaign tour through three New England States, in which he spread the assertion that conditions "are better than they were four years ago."

Throughout the 125-mile ride from Hartford to Stamford, Conn., yesterday, the President campaigned for the State's eight electoral votes with a contention that the New Deal has brought greater "prosperity."

Often the caravan of official cars had to slow down or stop as crowds by the thousand turned out in city after city to see the President.

Praises Cummings.

He stopped amid a crush of people at the Stamford station to speak briefly. He paid tribute to Homer Cummings as a "great Attorney General," Stamford is Cummings' home town.

Yesterday the President's Secret Service guard was doubled. Officials accompanying him explained it was because tens of thousands of persons who swarmed in the streets in Rhode Island and Massachusetts cities on Wednesday broke through ropes and police lines, crashed against the official cars and brought injury to many of their own number.

The President yesterday rode in an open car through one industrial city after another, waving his hat to huge and sometimes unruly crowds, pausing at several points for informal talks.

As he started out in Hartford

Douglas Out For Landon; Hits New Deal

Says Impoverishment Is Certain if Present Rule Continues.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Oct. 22.—Lewis W. Douglas, director of the budget in the early phase of Roosevelt's Administration, in a statement tonight said "I will go to the polls to express my opposition to the New Deal by voting for Mr. Landon."

The statement was issued from his home at Tilly Foster, N. Y., where he has been convalescing from an operation. He said:

"I have been opposed to the New Deal for a long time. I still am. My opposition is not to the purely temporary acts aimed to meet an extraordinary condition of affairs. It is to those measures which, purporting to be directed at emergency and temporary conditions, have become in fact the elements of permanent and irrevocable policy."

To Secretary of State Cordell Hull, Douglas paid this tribute: "The determined efforts of Cordell Hull, the Secretary of State, to reduce trade barriers constitute one of the few elements of real liberalism in the New Deal."

Face Impoverishment.

But, Douglas charged, the New Deal record "shows how the privileges, subsidies and monopolies which the Democratic Party solemnly promised in 1932 to withdraw have grown into a host of additional privileges, subsidies and monopolies, and how the bureaucratic activities and power of our central government have been expanded to fantastic proportions."

Continuing, Douglas asserted that the New Deal acts "can result only in the impoverishment of the people."

He concluded:

"This record does violence to the traditional principles and practices of American government. It has outraged the historic beliefs and the 1932 promises of the Democratic Party. I have always been a member of that party. But its substance has been corrupted; its virtue has been violated. To support it now is to dishonor the deep convictions of a lifetime. I will go to the polls to express my opposition to the New Deal by voting for Mr. Landon.

Frivolity Charged.

"The record shows that the administration of New Deal policies is frivolous and irresponsible and that the defense of its acts is evasive and ambiguous.

"The defenders of the New Deal have been strangely and suspiciously silent as to its purposes hereafter. Consequently, the record of the past is the only available clew to what may be expected in the future."

Rev. Gerald Smith Is Struck in Face After Radio Talk

New Orleans, La., Oct. 22 (U.P.).—The Rev. Gerald L. K. Smith, self-styled "rabble-rouser," who was read out of the Townsend pension organization two days ago, was assaulted tonight after delivering a radio address.

Friends rescued Smith, but not until he had been struck in the face.

The one-time lieutenant of the late Huey Long, who was denounced Tuesday by Dr. Francis E. Townsend as a "Fascist," was assaulted shortly after he completed an hour's radiocast. His speech had denounced the New Louisiana luxury tax.

Smith stood listening to a rival's radio attack when the assailant, who was not identified immediately, walked up and struck him.

"One blow struck me in the face," he admitted. He added the punch was "delivered by some 'plug-ugly' whom I don't know."

Pacelli Urges World Peace, Blesses Many

Cardinal Pacelli, secretary of state for Pope Pius XI, boarded a train for New York last night, leaving behind an impassioned plea for peace among the nations and an oft-repeated papal blessing.

The papal prince of the church took away [illegible] memory of a whirlwind, 12-hour program and some incidents not on that program.

One of these was at Mount Vernon, whither Cardinal Pacelli had gone to place a wreath on the tomb of George Washington.

A young couple, obviously honeymooners, halted the cardinal outside of the historic mansion. They knelt, kissed his episcopal ring, and then the woman said:

"Will you give us your blessing, Father?"

Cardinal Pacelli, who is properly addressed as "Your Eminence," made the sign of the cross and murmured a prayer, and the newlyweds moved on, eyes shining. A moment later another couple made the same request, and they, too, received a blessing.

Football Cheer Paraphrased.

At Georgetown University, where Cardinal Pacelli was awarded a degree, the students broke the solemnity of the occasion by roaring out a paraphrase of their football yell, the "Hoya, hoya, saxa." But the tag-line, instead of being for the "team," was for "Your Eminence."

"I give you a holiday," Cardinal Pacelli said later, at the conclusion of a speech, and the students cheered him again.

Cardinal Pacelli used his power to call today a holiday at two other schools—Catholic University and the Convent of the Sacred Heart, located at 1719 Massachusetts avenue northwest. His visit to the latter school was a surprise.

During the World War, Cardinal Pacelli was the emissary of Pope Benedict in that pontiff's efforts to end the conflict. In speaking yesterday for world peace, therefore, he spoke as a man who knows something about war.

The papal secretary of state—only "prime minister" in the world who has no army to back his words—spoke at a luncheon given in his honor by the National Press Club. It was the first time he had faced a strictly lay audience since he left Rome on a month's vacation.

"Glory belongs not only to those who triumph on battlefields," he said, "but even more to those who safeguard and foster public tranquility and peace.

Used No Notes.

"The Catholic Church and its august head desire greatly the protection of the peace—social peace and peace among the nations. The daily prayer of the Holy Father is for the peace and prosperity of the world—a prayer in which I invite all of you to join."

Cardinal Pacelli, his eyes smiling behind his glasses, said he was glad to pay tribute to "the ideas and ideals of your press in reporting with accuracy events in all parts of the world."

Cardinal Pacelli, who speaks seven languages, used no notes in addressing the 400 club members in English. He was introduced by George Stimpson, the club president.

From the club he motored to

Boy Kills Himself, Three Pals Seized After Theft Chase

By the Associated Press.

Memphis, Tenn., Oct. 22.—A brief career of crime in gangster style led to a morgue today for one Chicago youth and to jail for three teen-age companions.

A girl barely turned 15 was in city jail with two boy friends. They were captured today after a highway gun fight which followed a raid on a Memphis drug store. The holdup netted $50.

The car occupied by the juvenile bandits plowed through a steel highway barricade 11 miles north of Brownsville, Tenn., with officers in close pursuit.

Police started firing as the four emerged unhurt from the car. The girl, Priscilla Frost, of Beloit, Wis., and a youth who said he was Dick Flannery, 16, of Chicago, were captured.

Their companions, described by Detective Sergeant W. T. Pilkinton as Jimmy Magid, 15, of Chicago (other officers said Magid was 20), and Chester Johnston, 16, another Chicago youth, fled into the woods.

An hour later Magid was found dead with a bullet in his left tmple. Sergeant Pilkinton said the youth killed himself rather than surrender.

Johnston, too, Pilkinton said, had boasted he would "not be taken alive," but he surrendered when officers encountered him near Brownsville a few hours later.

Sergeant Pilkinton quoted the youngsters as saying the boys started a spree of banditry in Chicago a week ago by stealing an automobile and robbing an officer of his pistol. They said they attended a party Saturday night at Rockford, Ill., where they met the girl.

She agreed to go to California with them, but they headed South instead.

1,000,000 Get Jobs as Relief Cost Goes Up

By Felix Bruner.

While Secretary Perkins estimated yesterday 1,000,000 unemployed had been given jobs in industries during the year ended October 1, and 6,000,000 had gone back to work since 1932, Treasury figures indicated relief expenditures continue to increase and there is no proportionate falling-off in persons on relief.

At the same time, most recent figures of the United States Employment Service, which include many more classifications than industrial figures announced by the Secretary of Labor, show a big jump in placements.

Two reasons are given by officials for the discrepancy between re-employment of labor with improvement of business and failure of relief rolls to show a corresponding drop. One is the added burden to relief agencies caused by the drought. The other is the familiar argument that unemployed not on relief are first to be re-employed.

Miss Perkins estimated 355,000 workers were returned to jobs between August and September in the combined manufacturing and non-manufacturig industries regularly surveyed by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. She estimated weekly pay rolls in September were more than $2,500,000 greater than in the preceding month.

Sixth Month of Gains.

The Secretary of Labor said the gain marked the sixth successive month in which increases in aggregate employment have been shown. She estimated weekly wage disbursements in industries surveyed are $32,000,000 over last year.

"Factory employment," said the report, "reached the highest level in any month since June, 1930. Employment in retail and wholesale trade establishments exceeded that of September in any year since 1930, while in the metal mining industry, employment exceeded the level of any month since April, 1931. Power and light companies reported the largest number of workers since September, 1931."

Also on the credit side of the employment ledger was the recent report of the United States Employment Service showing that in September it made 167,790 placements, a 27-month peak. These placements were in private employment. At the same time, 44,758 placements were added to WPA rolls, smallest volume since beginning of the present program.

This compares with 128,353 private employmemnt placements in August and 62,632 placements on WPA rolls.

Total Is Unknown.

On the debit side of the employment ledger the story was quite different. Since the Federal Government turned over the care of so-called unemployables to the States, there is no way of obtaining an accurate estimate of the number of persons actually on relief, just as there never has been an acceptedly accurate estimate of the number of unemployed.

The peak load of all Federal work relief agencies came on February 29, when the total was 3,853,074. Of these, 3,038,973 were in the WPA, 459,700 were in the CCC and 354,401 were employed by all other Government agencies. Since then there has been a considerable shifting of the load from WPA to other agencies, but in recent months, in spite of the smaller number employed, the cost of the WPA has been going up.

Latest available figures on work relief are for the week ended September 5. A new report is expected within a few days. The

More than 40 Washington motorists have sworn they have been victimized by a "bargain fine" system in Prince Georges County, it was learned yesterday as the county commissioners announced they will conduct a separate inquiry, regardless of a current grand jury inquiry.

The Keystone Automobile Club of Washington says 25 motorists have requested a chance to appear before the grand jury, in addition to those who have signed affidavits.

The grand jury inquiry into a traffic violation fine system that allegedly has relieved Washington motorists of thousands of dollars, entered its third day with testimony by six witnesses.

Plans Preliminary Report.

Those heard were Raymond R. Iannucci, 306 Sixth street northwest; Paul A. Hines, National Press Building, and Rodney Nicholson, George Keneipp, manager of the Keystone Automobile Club here; Corporal William Rogers, of the Maryland State Police, and John E. Taylor, Washington newspaperman, 1739 I street northwest.

In an affidavit made public by the Keystone Club after he had appeared before the grand jury, Iannucci said that he had been arrested last July by two county policemen who took him to a police court, where one of the officers told him that if he had $151.70 he would not have to stay in jail for the night. He was charged with driving more than 60 miles an hour.

Iannucci said he was taken then before a justice of the peace who set his bond at $1,000, the justice

Murderer of Wife Sentenced to Life; Is Called Unstable

By the Associated Press.

Oregon, Ill., Oct. 22.—Guy Tallmadge, 56, was convicted today of murdering his wife, Bessie, 51, by a circuit court jury which recommended life imprisonment.

The jury deliberated more than four hours.

The State had asked the death penalty, accusing the philandering embalmer of killing his mate of 18 years to pursue a clandestine romance with Mrs. Frances Birch, 32-year-old red-haired widow.

The defense declared a chronic illness from which Tallmadge had suffered for years made him "emotionally unstable" at the time his wife was shot last May 19.

Uremic Poisoning Fatal to New Deal Backer in Detroit.

Made His Fortune As Ford Partner

Michigan G.O.P. Leader Was 64; Lost Fight for Senate.

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, Oct. 22.—United States Senator James Couzens, independent Republican of Michigan, died today after undergoing an operation to relieve uremic poisoning. He was 64 years old.

Couzens, who had served in the Senate since 1922, died at 4:30 p. m. (Eastern standard time) without regaining consciousness from the operation in which surgeons removed an obstruction that had contributed to his condition.

At his bedside in Harper Hospital today, in addition to his son, Mayor Frank Couzens, of Detroit, were the Senator's wife, the former Margaret A. Manning, of Detroit, and his three daughters, Mrs. William R. Yaw, Mrs. W. Jeffries Chewning and Betty Couzens.

The Independent Republican Senator, whose large personal fortune grew from his early association with Henry Ford in the automobile business, had suffered from a kidney disorder for several years.

In Hospital a Week.

Since August, 1935, when his left kidney was removed at a Rochester, Minn., clinic, his life virtually had depended on functioning of the remaining organ. He entered a Detroit hospital a week ago.

Couzens' political career ended in the Michigan primary election in September when, after declaring his support of the Democratic President Roosevelt, he was defeated for the Republican renomination to the Senate by former Gov. Wilber M. Brucker.

The Senator left his hospital bed to dine and make two platform appearances with Mr. Roosevelt when the President visited Detroit on a campaign tour recently.

In announcing he believed re-election of the President to be "the most important matter confronting the Nation," Couzens had added, "The outcome of my own candidacy for the Senate is neither important to the Nation nor to me."

Praised by Roosevelt.

Aboard Roosevelt Train En Route to Washington, Oct. 22 (AP).—President Roosevelt, informed of the death of Senator James Couzens, tonight said the Nation has lost a leader "whose courage was a match for his idealism."

The text of the Roosevelt statement:

"In the death of Senator Couzens the Senate of the United States and the people of Michigan and the Nation have lost a leader whose convictions were a part of the best that America aspires for and whose courage was a match for his idealism.

"Senator Couzens did not enter public life because he sought either fame or power, but rather because of a service he believed he could render to the cause of progressive thought and political uprightness. He was a party member. But his prior obligation was to the well-being of the people whom he served. He never hesitated in that service.

"The death of Senator Couzens to me is a great loss. But, more than that, it is a great loss to the multitudes of Americans whose needs and problems were always in the forefront of his thought and actions."

Story Book Career.

A career that is found more often in story book than in actual life was that of James Couzens.

It was a career that took him from Canadian train butcher and $40 a month car checked to success in the automotive industry and the distinction of being one of the wealthiest men in the United States Senate.

It frequently was said that Mr. Couzens was one of the several millionaires created by the Ford Motor Co.; that he put $2,500 into the company and took out $30,000,000. The statements are not exactly correct. It would be more nearly correct to say that Couzens was one

13-Day Sneezing Spell of Fort Myer Girl An 'Alleigic Manifestation,' Doctor Says

The case of 13-year-old Mary Margaret Cleer, of North Courthouse road, Fort Myer, Va., who has been sneezing since October 9, bids fair to become one of the most baffling in medical history of the District.

The golden-haired, attractive daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Cleer was stricken with an almost unbroken stretch of sneezing at her school desk at Washington-Lee High School.

"It came on her suddenly and without warning," her mother said yesterday as Mary, all smiles and sneezes for the cameraman, reclined in her bed.

"Mary is a normal child," the mother continued. "She is bright in school and has never been troubled with a mental or physical illness."

According to Mrs. Cleer, Mary was taken to the Children's Hospital here October 12, confined two days, then released when the sneezing fit had entirely subsided.

"Before morning she had a relapse and was soon worse than before. I got in touch with hospital authorities and they suggested that I take her to the clinic," the mother said.

She Sneezes.

Mary has been treated twice at the Children's Hospital clinic, her mother said, but so far has not responded to treatment.

"She sleeps a little better now," the mother despondently exclaimed, "but when the soothing effect of the medicine they give her wears off she is the same as before. Her appetite has fallen off, she can take only liquid foods and the shots in the arms they gave her on the second trip to the clinic only made her worse. This morning she had a violent spell and something, like a weight, was lifted from her chest. That gave her a respite for three hours, then it started up again."

Mrs. Cleer said that Mary can tell to the split second when a sneeze will start and when it will end.

"I don't mind it a bit. I only wish that my father and mother would quit all this worrying," Mary interrupted.

London Newspaper Kills Story On Edward's Marriage Rights

Special Dispatch to The Post.

London, Oct. 22.—A London newspaper which had planned to carry an article outlining the law governing the King's marriage to a commoner withdrew the article just before press time tonight.

The result is that the English people have yet to read anything in their daily newspapers hinting at the possibility of King Edward marrying Mrs. Ernest Simpson, his vivacious American-born friend.

The newspaper was the News-Chronicle. Its story was in type and proofs had been distributed when orders came to "kill" it. Whether pressure was brought to bear upon the News-Chronicle was not made known.

Meantime, American newspaper correspondents, who have been loading the cables with dispatches on Mrs. Simpson's divorce suit against her Harvard-educated husband, were flocking to Ipswich, where the suit will be heard.

Mrs. Simpson has charged her husband with misconduct with another woman, a charge which was "amicably" agreed to by Simpson. Ordinarily such cases are quickly disposed of in British courts and disputants are not asked to identify the "other party."

It was believed possible today, however, that Justice Hawke, who will preside, will insist that Mrs. Simpson name the "unnamed woman" in this particular case. British judges recently have become irked at the number of anonymous correspondents named in divorce cases.

The inhabitants of Ipswich for the most part know nothing about Mrs. Simpson's divorce suit. The case before the [illegible] that intrigues them is one in which a 62-year-old Lowestoft widow is accused of killing her 32-year-old son.

The News-Chronicle article, as it appeared in proof, did not mention Mrs. Simpson. It dealt entirely

Roosevelt Uses Public Money, Landon Asserts

G. O. P. Candidate, on Way to Oklahoma, Says Funds Help Campaign.

By the Associated Press.

Aboard Landon Train En Route to Oklahoma City, Oct. 22 (AP).—Gov. Alf M. Landon tonight said President Roosevelt "is dissipating the peoples' resources through waste, graft and incompetence" and using public money "directly and indirectly to secure his re-election."

He had called off scheduled train talks today and nursed a sore throat.

As his campaign special cut across the Texas Panhandle on a personal bid for Oklahoma's 11 Presidential electoral votes and a conference with William H. (Alfalfa Bill) Murray, former Democratic Governor, the Republican nominee issued a statement commenting on Mr. Roosevelt's Worcester, Mass., speech last night. He said, "The President would conceal the facts in order to effect his program of making over our American form of Government. Once more I challenge him to be candid with the American people. Let them know just what he intends to do. It is the only honest procedure for a candidate for the Presidency of the United States."

Fact Mistated.

Contending his Democratic opponent had "boasted" that his Administration changed the common law slogan of "let the buyer beware" to "let the seller beware," the Kansan said, "His Administration has made it a crime for those dealing in securities not only to affirmatively misstate material facts, but also to withhold or fail to disclose such facts.

"Judged by this very test laid down by his Administratoin, Mr. Roosevelt is attempting to sell himself to the people of this country for a second time without full disclosure. He is violating the principle of 'truth in Government' which is just as essential as 'truth in securities.'

"For the President is not only refusing to disclose material facts relating to Administration, but he is misrepresenting facts of which, as Chief Executive, he ought to have full knowledge."

Questions Evaded.

Landon said the Worcester speech "again evaded" his questions as to whether the President intends to "revive the policies of regimentation" and "to destroy our system of free enterprise and constitutional government."

"Mr. Roosevelt's theory of taxation," the Governor said, "is an acknowledgment of his fundamental objective, namely, to bring within the Federal Government the control of all of our commercial, industrial and social problems.

"Mr. Roosevelt would submerge us in innumerable Government activities which waste the energies and resources of our people, obstruct and hamper their productive abilities and sap and diminish their strength and capacity to provide for their own prosperity and security."

Pauperized Government.

"He has already pauperized the Federal Government and would now weaken and impoverish the people who support it.

"We Republicans believe that, if our form of Government is to endure, the budget must be balanced and a 'pay-as-you-go' tax policy adopted. Consequently we shall insist that the waste, incompetence, graft and corruption be eliminated in order to effect a balance between income and outgo.

"We believe that the only way to guard against such reckless and spendthrift policies as are now in vogue is to let the people know how much they are paying for Government."

Murray, an anti-New Dealer, was scheduled to introduce the Republican nominee to an audience at Oklahoma City tomorrow after boarding the campaign special at El Reno, Okla.

Landon, in turn, was said by aids to be preparing an address which would urge Democrats to cross party lines and support him.

Traveling eastward on his final drive for the Presidency, Landon was directed by doctors to rest his throat for strenuous campaigning ahead which includes major addresses at Indianapolis Saturday night and in Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, New York and St. Louis next week.

Works on Speeches.

The throat condition did not prevent Landon from continuing work on speeches and he conferred with William R. Castle, Undersecretary of State during Herbert Hoover's Administration; J. Reuben Clark, former Ambassador to Mexico, and Henry J. Haskell, editor of the Kansas City Star.

Aids said the nominee's first foreign affairs speech may be delivered in Indianapolis, although there was a possibility that it might be saved for an Eastern point.

Landon added a rear platform appearance at Tulsa to his Oklahoma itinerary, which calls for arrival at El Reno at 9:15 a. m. (Central standard time), and at Oklahoma City at 10:30 a. m.

In the Sooner State capital plans included a parade from the station to a hotel, conference with Republican leaders and a talk at 12:30 p. m. in the Coliseum. Leaving at 2 p. m., the special train will reach Tulsa at 4:40 p. m.

Before retiring for the night, the Governor will make a rear platform appearance at Springfield, Mo. His schedule calls for arrival in Indianapolis at 9:15 a. m. Saturday and a week-end stay in that city.

Crowd Wants Landon.

At operating stops of the Kansan's special train today, members of his party sometimes made brief talks in his behalf to groups which gathered for a glimpse of the candidate.

Clark told an El Paso audience Landon was "an ideal man" for the White House. He added that the nominee was "very tired" from campaigning. The former ambassador said "he hopes you will excuse him" for not appearing. There were a few "booes" at this announcement. Others shouted "we want Landon."

Justice William A. Smith, of the Kansas Supreme Court, told an audience at Oro Grand, N. Mex., that Gov. Landon has reached the point in his campaign where he must rest his throat.

Officials aboard the Landon train said the candidate's detailed campaign itinerary beyond Indianapolis was being prepared at Chicago National Committee headquarters and has not yet been forwarded to the Sunflower special.

Roosevelt Speeches Lead to Conclusion He Does Not Understand Meaning of Acts.

By Franklyn Waltman

Copyright, 1936, by The Washington Post.

ANY effort to square some of President Roosevelt's utterances during his campaign with the record of what has happened under his Administration leads inevitably to the conclusion that either his thinking is not very clear or he does not understand the significance of some of the things he has done.

WALTMAN.

To hear Mr. Roosevelt in this campaign talk about his advocacy of "free enterprise" and his battle against industrial monopolies creates the feeling that one must have dreamed the things which occurred under NRA, AAA, the Bankhead cotton-control act and similar legislation.

And so it was with that part of his Worcester, Mass., speech which had to do with taxes. There he strove to make it appear that throughout the last three and one-half years he had been actuated in dealing with revenue matters only by the American principle that "taxes shall be levied according to ability to pay."

Of course that is a sound American governmental principle of taxation and none can quarrel with it. But it was not inaugurated by President Roosevelt nor has he lived up to that principle during the years he has been President.

* * *

One unfamiliar with the history of Federal revenue legislation might have obtained the impression, listening to the President from Worcester, that after the World War and until the advent of the New Deal the Federal Government was dominated by a hard-hearted financial plutocracy which year by year reduced the taxes on the rich but left intolerable burdens resting on the poor, on those who work and those really unable to pay.

But what are the facts? The Republican Administrations which followed the Wilson regime did reduce Federal income taxes over a period of years as surpluses in annual accounts piled up and the national debt was reduced. Perhaps they reduced these tax rates too fast. Perhaps it would have been wiser policy if higher rates had been maintained until the national debt was wiped out or reduced to negligible levels.

Whatever might be said on that score, it is a fact that those Republican Administrations played no favorites; they reduced the tax rates in all levels and the little man benefited proportionately as much as the wealthy man. Congress would not let it have been done in any other way because members of Congress are dependent on votes and there are far more little fellows than big ones—and the vote of one counts no more than the vote of the other.

By 1928, the normal income tax rate had been reduced from a level of 8 and 12 per cent in war days, to 1½, 3 and 5 per cent. Surely this benefited the little fellow. Personal exemptions were increased by these Republican Administrations, letting hundreds of thousands of little fellows escape from paying any Federal tax whatever.

* * *

But that was not all. President Roosevelt at Worcester asked "how else have we improved and Americanized the tax structure?" and he answered that "first, we gave a credit to earned income—that is, income from personal work or service—thus substantially reducing taxes paid by the working citizen," and he asked, "Wasn't that the American thing to do?"

Those words, and the tone of the President's voice, clearly indicated that the New Deal had inaugurated the practice of granting a credit for earned income—that this was a blessing never enjoyed by the American workingman until it was enacted into law by the New Deal in 1934.

What are the facts? A credit for earned income first was written into the Federal income tax law in 1924, when Andrew Mellon sat in the Treasury and Calvin Coolidge in the White House. And a far more liberal credit was granted in that year than in 1934, the provision which still governs. And in the tax laws of 1926 and 1928 that credit provision was further liberalized by extension of the limit of what might be called earned income. The provision, however, was abandoned in the 1932 tax act which was the result of a belated effort of the Hoover Administration to meet the fiscal emergency.

Perhaps its abandonment under the circumstances was justified—but the action was not taken on recommendation of the Hoover Administration. Undersecretary of Treasury Ogden L. Mills specifically advised against it. But the Democratic controlled House Ways and Means Committee disregarded that advice and struck out the credit for earned income. It was not the sons of the rich—but the Democrats who did that. And it was the Democratic controlled Congress which raised the normal rates—which are the rates on the little fellow's pay—higher than the Hoover Treasury had recommended in that year.

Thus, after the Democrats had raised the rates in the lower brackets—and there is no quarrel here with what they did—Mr. Roosevelt came into office, lowered them, and now proudly proclaims that any family head who earns an income of less than $26,000 paid a smaller income tax in 1936 than he paid in 1932. But he did not pay a smaller tax than he paid in 1928—or in 1930—and there is no reason why he should.

There is no reason why men earning $20,000 or $25,000 a year should pay less income taxes now than they paid in 1932, in view of the condition of the Treasury. This situation is the antithesis of the principle of taxing those with an "ability to pay." And this is true particularly in view of the so-called hidden or indirect taxes levied by the Treasury, which bear as heavily on the little fellow earning $2,000 or $3,000 as on the $25,000 fellow.

By making a comparison between 1936 and 1932, Mr. Roosevelt boasted of his reduction proportionately of the indirect or hidden taxes. The figures he cited may be correct. I have not checked them. But if the Supreme Court last January had not invalidated the AAA processing taxes it would have been impossible for Mr. Roosevelt to have made such a statement. During his regime those taxes took out of the pockets of the consumers—and such taxes, by his very words, bear down unfairly on the little man and without regard to ability to pay—more than $1,000,000,000. But Mr. Roosevelt said nothing about that.

Nor did he explain that when he submitted his proposals to Congress for the 1935 "share the wealth" tax bill he appealed for their passage, not on the ground that they were necessary for sound fiscal policy, but as a step toward what he conceived to be a sound social and economic philosophy.

The principle of ability to pay does not mean that some shall pay all and others nothing—it means that the justifiable debt of government shall be prorated or divided among our people on a basis of their ability to pay. But on that basis Rexford Tugwell could not use taxation as instrument to accomplish his plans to reform America.

Union Charges Anti-Roosevelt Job Lay-Offs

Claim Shipyards Seek to Injure New Deal Is Studied by Navy.

A charge that six large shipyards, despite millions of dollars in unfulfilled contracts, have laid off hundreds of workmen in an attempt to create the impression the Roosevelt Administration is destroying jobs, was being investigated last night by the Navy Department.

The claim was made in a letter sent to Secretary of the Navy Claude N. Swanson and Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins by the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America.

The firms accused include:

Bethlehem Ship Corporation, Quincy, Mass.; United Shipyards, Inc., Staten Island, N. Y.; Bath Iron Works, Bath, Me.; Newport News Shipbuilding & Drydock Co., Newport News, Va.; Federal Shipbuilding Co., Kearny, N. J., and New York Shipbuilding Corporation of Camden, N. J.

Appropriate Action.

The office of Admiral William H. Standley, chief of naval operations, said an exhaustive investigation will be made * * * and appropriate action will be taken on the premises."

In order to give workers the impression that "private industry is putting them to work, while the Government is turning them out on the street," the union's letter noted the "fact that the Sun Shipbuilding Corporation in Chester, Pa., the only yard with any considerable amount of private contracts, is hiring all the mechanics it can get."

Secretary Perkins' office said a Labor Department inquiry would be ordered shortly.

Officials Deny Charge.

Newport News, Va., Oct. 22 (AP).—Charges that the Newport News Shipbuilding & Drydock Co. was laying off workers to create anti-Roosevelt sentiment were characterized today by yard officials as absolutely without foundation.

1,000,000 Get Jobs as Relief Spending Rises

September 5 report shows a total employment of 3,427,129, of whom 2,404,824 are in the WPA, 379,800 in the CCC and 642,505 employed by other agencies. This is a reduction in the total of 425,945 from the peak. The most recent estimate of destitute farmers put to work under WPA as a result of the drought is 259,474. They are from 20 of the 48 States, with South Dakota having far the largest representation, 45,455, representing nearly 50 per cent of farm families of the State.

Low Mark in August.

WPA expenditures, since the organization got under way, reached a low mark of $152,629,405 in August and then started back upward, Treasury figures reveal. Hopkins still is keeping well above his average expenditure of $5,000,000 a day. His expenditures still are higher than the increase in the industrial pay roll estimated by Secretary Perkins.

These figures do not take into account the growing disbursements of the Public Works Administration, just now again getting under way under the new appropriation, the expenditures of the Resettlement Administration, and the various other Government relief disbursements. Dr. Rexford G. Tugwell's Resettlement Administration, however, has been spending, according to Treasury figures, only about as much in a month as Hopkins spends in two days. For the first quarter of the present fiscal year, Tugwell's disbursements totaled $40,276,339.

During each of the five months ended with September the Hopkins organization spent the following sums:

May, $173,700,000.
June, $169,102,580.
July, $162,051,064.
August, $152,629,405.
September, $164,487,919.

The figures for the first 15 days of October indicate the increase still continues. For the 15 days, the cost of WPA was $84,252,941.

Hoffman Saves Parkers.

Trenton, Oct. 22 (AP).—Extradition of Detective Ellis H. Parker and his son, Ellis, jr., to Kings County, N. Y., to face indictments in the Paul H. Wendel kidnaping, was refused today by Gov. Harold Hoffman.

The Campaign Arena

By the Associated Press.

Dover, Del., Oct. 22.—Senator James F. Byrnes (Democrat), South Carolina, accused Senator Arthur H. Vandenburg (Republican), Michigan, tonight of reversed form in his public utterances and termed his interrupted radio "debate" with the recorded voice of President Roosevelt a "publicity stunt."

Senator Byrnes, in a speech prepared for delivery here, told a Democratic rally "it would be more interesting to have him debate with himself."

The Democratic Senator quoted Vandenburg as saying in 1934:

"We owe all possible support to Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States, in what we unitedly hope and pray may be the permanent upsurge of American affairs."

Senator Byrnes declared that "in view of the statements he then made the people will pay little attention to his denunciations of the President at this time."

New York, Oct. 22.—With facilities of three large radio networks and many independent stations engaged for the hour from 11 to 12 p. m. (Eastern standard time) November 2, the Democratic Party appears to have clinched the "last word" in the campaign.

More than 250 stations were scheduled to be in a hookup to carry President Roosevelt's final campaign speech.

The N. B. C. red network has been reserved from 10 to 11 the same night by the Republican National Committee for Gov. Landon's closing address. William Lemke, Union Party Presidential candidate, is scheduled to speak over the N. B. C. blue network from 9:30 to 10:30 p. m.

* * * *

Chicago, Oct. 22 (AP).—The Union Party today listed 34 States in which it had filed the names of William Lemke and Thomas C. O'Brien as candidates for President and Vice President. The survey showed Lemke's name was not on the ballot in these States: Arkansas, California, Florida, Kansas, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, Nevada, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Vermont and West Virginia.

* * * *

New York, Oct. 22 (AP).—Charges of illegal registrations for next month's elections in New York City—promptly challenged by the attorney general's office—have been made by the Honest Ballot Association.

Monroe Percy Bloch, attorney for the association, said at least 240,000 fraudulent enrollments were included in the city's record registration.

* * * *

New York, Oct. 22 (AP).—Gov. Herbert H. Lehman tonight returned the favor former Gov. Alfred E. Smith granted when he waived reservation of a half hour's radio time to permit President Roosevelt to speak.

Smith, campaigning against Mr. Roosevelt's re-election, spoke from Chicago tonight from 9:30 to 10:30 p. m. Lehman, driving for re-election with the President on the Democratic ticket, was scheduled to broadcast from Syracuse from 9:30 to 10 p. m., but announced that, at Smith's request, he had moved the time up half an hour, to 9 p. m.

* * * *

Washington, Ind., Oct. 22 (AP).—Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen Rohde, whose campaign tour in behalf of President Roosevelt's re-election was interrupted when she suffered a fractured leg near here several weeks ago, resumed her speaking tour today with an address broadcast from her hospital room.

* * * *

New York, Oct. 22 (AP).—Norman Thomas, the Socialist Presidential candidate, said today that the "brightest fact I discovered during my tour was that the Lemke-Coughlin star has set." Reiterating his prediction that President Roosevelt will be re-elected, Thomas said: "It's foolish for the labor unions to waste more of their good money on the Roosevelt campaign. The job is over."

* * * *

New York, Oct. 22 (AP).—Maj. George L. Berry, president of Labor's Nonpartisan League, told an American Labor Party rally tonight that Gov. Landon favors doing away "with all attempts to raise industrial wages and purchasing power through collective bargaining, free from employer interference."

* * * *

The Republican National Committee said last night that "screws are being turned" on county agents for the Agriculture Department "in the campaign fund extortion program of the New Dealers."

In another statement, the Republican committee said "coercive tactics" had been used by the Tennessee Democratic Club in soliciting campaign contributions from Federal employes.

* * * *

Utica, N. Y., Oct. 22 (AP).—Thirteen trade agreements now functioning between the United States and other countries are "already bearing fruit * * * along a widespread front," Francis B. Sayre, Assistant Secretary of War, said tonight in a speech defending the national Administration's foreign trade policy.

* * * *

A third Republican statement said President Roosevelt at Worcester, Mass., Wednesday night "attempted the most amazing hoax on the working man." Quoting his assertion that "taxes are higher for those who can afford to pay high taxes" and lower for those less able to pay, it was said that "hidden" taxes had risen from $25.35 for each family head in 1932 to $69.98 in 1935.

* * * *

Representative Robert L. Bacon of New York, Eastern campaign manager of the National Republican Congressional Committee, said yesterday that President Roosevelt "is trying to placate aroused citizens with more sugar-coated phrases. "Candidate Roosevelt," Bacon asserted, "has found another lulling catch-phrase—'Democracy in taxation.'"

AAA Mails $8,836 To 2 States in East

By the Associated Press.

The first part of $470,000,000 that will be distributed by the Federal Government to about 6,000,000 farm owners and operators under this year's soil conservation program was on the way last night to Pennsylvania and Maine. The Farm Administration announced that 102 checks, amounting to $8,863, had been mailed to farmers who cooperated with the program in those two States.

Benefit Card Party.

A benefit card party will be held at the Holy Comforter School auditorium at 8:45 p. m. tonight under auspices of the church building fund drive.

False Pretense Action Settled

Frederick, Md., Oct. 22.—The case of false pretense against Capt. Henry C. Getzendanner, prominent Charles Town, W. Va., business man and former State senator from West Virginia, has been "stetted" on the criminal docket of the Frederick County Circuit Court by State's Attorney Sherman P. Bowers, who said a settlement has been made out of court.

Getzendanner was indicted more than a year ago for having illegally sold cattle on pasture in his meadow near Charles Town to a local packing concern, when the steers actually were the property of Thomas B. Glasscock and Henry Fishburn, of Virginia. Getzendanner received $2,877.25. Criminal charges were then preferred by Glasscock and Fishburn and Getzendanner was indicted.

The amount involved in settlement was not disclosed.

Hypnotism Cures Paralyzed Girl, 17; Walks and Dances

London, Oct. 22 (AP).—Seventeen-year-old Dorothy Pugh, who said she had been paralyzed for three years, walked and danced today and announced one application of hypnotism had cured her.

She said she had been hynotized by Dr. A. E. Gibbs, a young practitioner, at Dagenham, near London, and added:

"I felt a little sick after he hypnotized me, but I found to my amazement that I could walk and speak."

Dr. Gibbs stated the attitude of the medical profession to his work was indicated by a leading medical journal refusing an article by him outlining his methods.

Miss Pugh said she had been in six London hospitals and was considered incurable.

Four Glimpses of His Eminence, Cardinal Pacelli, on One-Day Visit in the Nation's Capital

Harris & Ewing. Underwood & Underwood.

tion of powers under the Federal Government since 1933 and the "growth of bureaucracy."

"Who is going to pay it?" he asked, then added, "we are. Why, you know, when I hear this talk about soaking the rich, if we took all the rich men in the country and stood them on their heads and took everything away from them including their undershirts, you could not begin to pay any part of it."

Heckler Interrupts.

While he was in the midst of his discussion of the fiscal affairs, a grayhaired man, later identified by police as Harry Track, employe of a Polish newspaper, ran down the center aisle shouting at Smith.

"Let me say just a word," he shouted, then: "Roosevelt, Roosevelt."

Several persons in the audience starting yelling "throw him out," but he continued to shout "hooray for Roosevelt."

He was finally taken from the auditorium by four men, one of them holding his hand on his mouth as he kept calling President Roosevelt's name. Smith then resumed.

He said the New Deal was "playing football, and the rank and file of the American people are the football."

"On November 3," he said, "I am perfectly satisfied that millions and millions of Jeffersonian Democrats —Democrats who believe in the fundamental principles of the Democratic Party, who regard it as their political byword, Democrats who believed in the 1932 platform and what it enforced—will go to the polls and so cast their votes as to let the New Deal play football, while a different administration will give a sane, orderly, sensible, comprehensive administration under Gov. Landon of Kansas."

Charges Broken Pledges.

Smith said he was speaking against the Roosevelt Administration because he believed he was "actually helping to save the Democratic Party."

"After the Administration had entirely disregarded the fundamental principles of the party, cast the platform into the discard, forgot all of the campaign promises," he said, "and then met in Philadelphia to indorse the actions of the present Administration, that means approval on the third of November leaves the Democratic Party with nothing of fundamental principle except what took place in the last three and one-half years at Washington.

"Therefore, do I say with the profound belief within my own heart and could that I am speaking for the future preservation of the Democratic Party as I understand it and its principles have been taught to me since I was a very small boy."

Stating that the $34,000,000,000 owned by the Government "is going to come out of the pay envelopes, from the proceeds of the sale of stock on the farm, from the cash register in the office of the small businessman, and from the treasurer of the large corporations."

"Where will this borrowing eventually lead us to?" he asked.

"Where are we going to wind up? We have not only the $34,000,000,000 debt, but we are going to have to borrow some more.

"Any government, like any family, can for a year spend a little more than it earns, but you and I know that a continuation of that habit means the poor house. That was said by the President on the 30th of July, in the City of Albany, in 1932. I submit we are already there."

"Means Dictatorship."

In criticizing the President for handling relief appropriations in a lump sum and allocating them himself instead of allowing Congress to do this, he said, "that means dictatorship."

"The duly elected and properly accredited representatives of the people declined to appropriate for a certain purpose," he continued. "They should be the master of the country's purse strings."

Smith was introduced by Sterling Edmunds, St. Louis lawyer and secretary of the National Jeffersonian Democrats.

The former Democratic standard bearer was given an ovation when he arose to speak.

He started by saying that every time he came to Chicago, he "came here as a democrat" and "never was a stronger "democrat" than he was tonight.

Speaking of the public debt, he said:

"It is going to be paid by the rank and file. At Pittsburgh, about a week ago, the President was making a speech and he spoke about debt and he referred to the debt as the crushing load that is his exact words, a crushing load. We know that. Here is how he says it is going to be paid; it is going to be paid out of an increased national income, an increased individual income produced by national prosperity.

Says Bonus Money Owing.

"Now I analyzed that for myself the other day and I tried to reduce it down to the simple language of the sidewalk, and it means this, the more you make, the more we take."

Referring to President Roosevelt's recent statement that the bonus "payment is now out of the way," he said:

"We borrowed the money and we owe it.

"It cannot possibly be out of the way; it cannot possibly be no longer an obligation. Not only do we owe it but at 2 per cent we are going to pay $30,000,000 a year interest on it."

Cardinal Pacelli Makes Plea for World Peace, Blesses Honeymoon Couple at Mount Vernon

Papal State Secretary Talks at Press Club, Pays Schools Visit.

Mount Vernon. A benign sun bathed the Lincoln Memorial and the other architectural glories of Washington, which Cardinal Pacelli passed on his way to the shrine along the Potomac.

From Mount Vernon, the police motorcycle escort guided Cardinal Pacelli's black limousine to Georgetown University, where he was given the degree of doctor of canon and civil law.

Cardinal Pacelli arose early yesterday morning and said mass in the chapel of the Apostolic Delegation House at 1811 Biltmore street. Two of the monsignori of the delegation staff attended him.

Then he motored to Catholic University in Brookland. At the wheel was George A. Blazonski, chauffeur for Mrs. Nicholas F. Brady, wealthy Long Island widow, who is the cardinal's hostess on his American visit.

A colorful crowd, made up of priests in the habits of their different orders, nuns and students, gathered to welcome the distinguished visitor.

Greeted by Kelly.

Arrived at the Hilltop, Cardinal Pacelli was saluted at the gate by Inspector Ed Kelly, stalwart veteran of the police force, who has greeted the present King of England and a host of other celebrities here. Earlier in the day, upon being introduced to Cardinal Pacelli by Archbishop Michael J. Curley, of Baltimore, Inspector Kelly knelt and kissed his great amethyst ring.

Cardinal Pacelli moved through a lane formed by khaki-clad members of Georgetown's Reserve Officers Training Corps, and at the steps of the college was greeted by the Very Rev. Arthur A. O'Leary, S. J., president of Georgetown, and the Rev. Edmund A. Walsh, the vice president, an old friend.

Father O'Leary, in an address of greeting, sketched Cardinal Pacelli's career from his days as a brilliant student to his promotion to his present post, where "he is the counselor and closest collaborator of the Supreme Pontiff."

Father Walsh read the charter granted Georgetown by Congress in 1815, after which Father O'Leary conferred on Cardinal Pacelli the degree of doctor of canon and civil law.

The president of the yard, Peter James Brennan, of the class of '37, extended the greetings of the student body in Latin, and his fluency in that "dead language" brought a smile of appreciation from Cardinal Pacelli. Brennan was leaving the stage when Father Walsh called him over and whispered to him. Thereupon Brennan called on the students to give Cardinal Pacelli a rousing "Hoya!"

Cardinal Pacelli reminded the gathering that Georgetown's great seal bears the inscription: "Utraque Unum," proclaiming that there is no conflict between science and religion, the natural and the supernatural.

"And," he added, "there should be no conflict between love of God and love of country. * * *

"Let science go hand in hand with religion, let love of country be motivated by love of God, let the value of the immortal be above all that is mortal, for only in this way can education be true and solid and lasting, only in this way can genuine patriotism thrive, only in this way can a country hope to enjoy true peace and prosperity."

Interested in Visits.

If Cardinal Pacelli was late for most of his engagements yesterday, it was because many of the things he saw appeared to fascinate him. Thus he lingered overtime at the Library of Congress, studying the faded Constitution, the ancient Gutenberg Bible and other objects of interest, and as a result was a bit tardy in arriving at the Press Club.

He also was late in arriving at Georgetown, but the incident that occasioned it was perhaps the most delightful of the day. This was his unheralded stop at the Convent of the Sacred Heart. The sight of the little boys and girls, shepherded by the nuns, obviously gave him joy, and he told them all how glad he was to see them.

In the end, he spoke the magic words:

Leaves for New York Following Whirlwind Stay of 12 Hours.

"I give you a holiday."

The youngsters must have wanted to shout; instead they said in a chorus:

"Thank you, Your Eminence."

Cardinal Pacelli, his red cap gleaming in the sun, entered the university gymnasium as solemn music flooded that great structure.

He was introduced by Archbishop Michael J. Curley, of Baltimore, chancellor of the university.

Cardinal Pacelli recalled that he almost became a member of the C. U. teaching staff in his younger days.

"As I stand here in your midst," he said, "there comes to mind a recollection of my younger years when, at the invitation of the lamented former rector, Bishop Shahan, I was about to become a member of your staff of professors and to bring to the students of the New World a knowledge and love of one of the noblest products of the human mind, Roman law.

Feels at Home.

"When I realize that only the fatherly prohibition of the saintly Pontiff, Piux X, kept me from accepting such an agreeable invitation, you will understand how this place, which was about to become for me a second home by adoption, does not seem entirely strange now that I am its guest, and how it is that the words of warm and heartfelt affection come readily to my lips. * * *

"The eyes of the Holy Father rest on you. The heart of the Holy Father beats in your midst. The good wishes of the Holy Father accompany you in your labors. Full of paternal affection, he invokes upon the directors, the professors and the student body, upon the patrons and benefactors of this well-deserving and important university, an abundance of heavenly blessings."

Cardinal Pacelli, after leaving the Library of Congress visited the National Catholic Welfare Conference headquarters, where he was escorted by Mgr. John J. Burke, general secretary. He gave the papal blessing to the staff.

President Back After Brief Trip To New England

Roosevelt Tells Throngs in Connecticut Prosperity Has Returned.

in midmorning, he told tens of thousands of yelling people spread for hundreds of yards through Bushell Park:

"I am glad that prosperity is back with us again and believe me, it's going to stay. And I believe that on the third of November, some time in the evening, I'm going to get a telegram * * * telling me the State of Connecticut is in the Democratic column."

Lunches in New Haven.

Afterward, he spoke again from the New Haven green and then set out for an afternoon stumping trip through Bridgeport, Norwalk and Darien.

Repeatedly along the way he spoke of "prosperity." At Waterbury, in a park thickly packed with people, he said also that for three and a half years the Administration had been seeking greater "security" for the Nation.

Making Progress.

"I believe we have been making progress and that we are going to make more," he added as a cheer rose from the crowd.

A bit earlier in Meriden he had asserted that judging from all he had heard, "the greatest silverware center of the world is better off" than it was four years ago.

He said, too, that the Administration, with "some success," had been trying to end the depression and bring prosperity back, and that it was trying especially "to make it a permanent prosperity." He said there was no better index of prosperity than the silverware industry, and remarked that under the previous Administration the country had had a "false prosperity."

Children with fluttering flags and shrill voices stood in front of nearly every school passed by the caravan of official cars. At several places the crowds, anxious for a glimpse of the Chief Executive, streamed along the streets and darted through the procession of autos, risking injury and shattering the nerves of the drivers.

But for the most part, State motorcycle police, local officers and National Guardsmen with riot sticks kept them fairly well in check.

Gov. Cross, Senators Maloney and Lonergan, State Democratic Chairman J. Francis Smith, National Committeeman David Fitzgerald, National Committeewoman Josephine Flynn and State Vice Chairman Nora Harris made the Connecticut jaunt with the President. Mrs. Roosevelt rode by his side.

Attorney General Cummings and Mrs. Cummings joined the party at New Haven.

The trip was nonpolitical to the extent that before starting out Mr. Roosevelt conferred with Cross and other State officials on flood control problems, and along the way took note of areas in the Connecticut and Naugatuck River valleys swept by destructive floods last spring.

Flood Control Aid.

In Hartford and again at Middletown farther down the Connecticut River, he said flood control was a problem requiring not only cooperation among States, but also participation of the Federal Government.

And in Hartford he added that "your Federal Government stands ready to do its share to control floods in the future."

Mrs. Roosevelt left the train at New York to plan a week-end at Hyde Park and some early Christmas shopping next Monday in New York.

"From now until November 3, I am 'off the record,'" Mrs. Roosevelt said.

Admiral Reeves Stresses Value Of Unity in War

Day of Ignorant Fighting Is Past, Kiwanians Told at Navy Day Fete.

Declaring that "the day of ignorant fighting is past," and that "in modern warfare the victory goes to the side marshaling all its units to fight as one," Rear Admiral Joseph M. Reeves yesterday discussed the value of the mobile air force of the naval fleet in a speech before the Kiwanis Club, at its ninth annual Navy Day luncheon.

"No matter how big or how well-manned our battleships may be, they are impotent in the face of danger unless their auxiliary forces are effective," he said. "Today, one of the most important of these is the sky fleet." He then discussed the use and value of the various types of planes used in sea warfare, and stressed their importance in battle.

After Admiral Reeves' talk, a motion picture, "Sky Fleets of the Navy," was shown. Later an appreciation of the speech and the film was expressed by Jo V. Morgan in behalf of other members of the club.

Honor guests, in addition to the speaker, were: Admiral William H. Standley, chief of Naval Operations; Rear Admiral Adolphus Andrews, chief of the Bureau of Navigation; Rear Admiral H. R. Stark, chief of the Bureau of Ordnance; Rear Admiral H. J. Bowen, chief of the Bureau of Engineering; Rear Admiral E. S. Land, chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair; Rear Admiral George T. Pettengil, commandant, Washington Navy Yard; Commander F. G. Reinicke, public relations branch, Navy Department, and Lieut. Comdr. L. S. Perry, aid to commandant, Washington Navy Yard.

Death of Pedestrian Declared Unavoidable

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Waynesboro, Pa., Oct. 22.—A coroner's jury returned a verdict of "unavoidable accident" at an inquest here yesterday afternoon into the death of Herman King, 59, fatally injured by an automobile driven by Joseph Verdier, as he walked on the highway from Five Forks to Waynesboro early Saturday evening. Although the verdict did not include exonoration of the driver of the car, witnesses testified before Coroner A. W. Thrush that King had been walking in the center of the highway.

Funeral services for King were conducted Tuesday afternoon at Prices Church, near here, by the Rev. Carl Valentine and the Rev. Harry Muck. Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Catherine King, and these sons and daughters: Harry King, Fred King, Mrs. Earl Baer, Miss Lelia King, Norman King and Herman, jr., all of Waynesboro; Mrs. Betty Zimmerman, Fayettsville; Clyde King, Greencastle, and Mrs. John Lehman, of near Fayetteville.

Drivers Exonerated In Four Fatalities

Martinsburg, W. Va., Oct. 22.—Four out of five persons held under bond in connection with as many automobile fatalities in Berkeley County since early last May were exonerated by the grand jury in session yesterday. In these four cases the jury voted "not a true bill."

Persons exonerated were: L. M. Johns, for the death of George Riggs, struck by Johns' car last May; Mable Swartz, for the death of Clara Maidlow last June; F. O. Trump, for the death of Charles C. Helferstay and Edward Dellinger, for the death of Ethlyn Evans last August.

Police Seek New Angle In Murder of Widow

Huntington, W. Va., Oct. 22 (AP).—Police investigators, failing after five days to find a clue to solve the killing of the wealthy Mrs. Juliette B. Enslow, said today they were going to hunt the slayer "from an entirely different angle." Detective Lieut. Leslie J. Swann, in charge of the case, would not elaborate on the statement.

Swann asked guests who played bridge at the widow's home the night before she was found beaten and strangled to come to police headquarters, "in the hope that by some remote chance," they might be able to give the officers a tangible clue leading to the slayer.

Culbertson to Speak At Hagerstown Rally

Hagerstown, Md., Oct. 22.—William S. Culbertson, former United States Ambassador to Chile and a former member of the United States Tariff Commission, will be the principal speaker at the mass meeting of Washington County Republicans to be held at the State Armory here Friday, October 30. The rally will bring to an end the local Republican campaign.

Culbertson was named by the Republican National Committee because of his understanding of the tariff question and his address here will be a reply to the address to be made here next Tuesday at a Democratic rally by Secretary of State Cordell Hull.

Edith Maxwell Resumes Old Role Of Teacher as Day Ends on Farm

Edith Maxwell, the "lonesome pine" girl, awaiting a new trial for the "slipper" slaying of her father, Trigg Maxwell, takes out time from her farm chores to frolic with some puppies. Left to right are Anne Ruth Maxwell, Edith and Mary Catherine Maxwell.

Helps Sisters Do Home Work, But Shadow of Trial Looms.

By Edward T. Folliard.

A Staff Correspondent.

Drewrys Bluff, Va., Oct. 22.—About this time two years ago Edith Maxwell, just out of normal school, was well started on her career as a teacher. Her school, a one-room structure, was on Bold Camp Creek, near her home, in the Cumberland Mountains.

It was no easy assignment, that first one of Edith's. Crowded into the single room were 40 boys and girls, divided into grades ranging from the first to the seventh. She taught all seven of them, and for this she received $65 a month.

Today Edith Maxwell, instead of pointing a wand at the blackboard, is doing chores on a farm here, helping her family—transplanted from the mountains—to make good as tenant farmers.

Anne Ruth, 16, and Mary Catherine, 13, have just started in the Chester High School, six miles from the farm, and it is nice, they say, to have an older sister to help at a time like this.

Second Trial Nears.

Pretty soon, though, books and lessons will have to be put aside for some grim recitations in a court room.

On November 16, at Wise, Va., Big Sister Edith will be called to trial for a second time on a charge of murdering her father, Trigg Maxwell. She is accused of killing him with a slipper while he, in a drunken rage, was beating her and threatening to kill her.

The trial is being held a second time because the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals threw out the verdict rendered by the court at Wise in the first trial—a verdict of first-degree murder, with a sentence of 25 years in the State Penitentiary.

In holding that this verdict was not justified by the evidence, the appeals court vindicated those readers of The Washington Post who, convinced that Edith Maxwell was unjustly punished, contributed money to finance a fight for a new trial and are now contributing more money to meet the expenses of the trial. It also was vindication for Charles Henry Smith, outstanding criminal lawyer of Alexandria, Va., who carried the case to the high court.

Mary Star Witness.

Thirteen-year-old Mary Catherine was a star witness for her big sister in the first trial, and she is expected to be no less in the next.

Mary Catherine, who was with her mother while Edith and her father tussled in another room, testified that she heard her father threaten to kill Edith with a butcher knife and she recalled how scared she was that night "with Pappy a'yelling and a-cursing and Edith a-trying to outrun him."

She also told of overhearing Trigg, angry because Edith was out late, say "a man ought to break her damn neck."

Edith herself testified that that apparently was just what her father was trying to do when, in desperation, she struck out at him with the slipper. He went to bed after that, got up later to get a drink of water, and fell dying.

Twelve mountaineers, living in a region where a girl "has no call to raise her hand against her pappy," called that first-degree murder, which means premeditated, malicious murder.

A $10 contribution—his third to the Edith Maxwell defense fund—was received yesterday from E. K. Houser, 1217 Vermont avenue northwest. That sent the total of money received for the expenses of the second trial to $256.

In his letter to The Post, Mr. Houser said:

"It seems rather hard to raise this fund for a good cause for this poor girl, so I am sending you $10 more to help her. This makes three contributions I have given since you asked for help. I am rooting for her to get clear and start over again."

Second Ordeal to Open in Wise, Va., Nov. 16 for Hill Family.

'Dead' Veteran, Found in West, Admits Identity

Jesse Gifford Refuses to Clear Up Mystery of Why He Vanished.

Jesse Owen Gifford, war veteran who was "dead and buried" five years ago, is alive today in Susanville, Calif., Veterans' officials here admitted yesterday.

Gifford, aged 41, sprang into the national limelight when he filed claim for his bonus money after his wife, who thought she was his widow, had already collected it. He established the fact of his aliveness to the satisfaction of the War Department by means of fingerprints.

Mrs. Gifford, his wife, last night said, in South Pittsburgh, Tenn.:

"If my husband doesn't want to come back to me, I don't intend to go back to him. But I think he ought to help support our two children."

Gifford, who described himself in California yesterday as "a lone wolf, who never told anyone what he was doing," still has a lot of red tape to cut to get his bonus, officials said.

Wearing crutches, his left leg in a cast, Gifford told the Associated Press he needed his bonus because his leg was broken by a taxicab in Reno, Nev., July 4.

He refused to clear up more of the mystery surrounding his strange disappearance from Chattanooga, Tenn., eight years ago until his brother and a Chattanooga newspaperman arrived in Susanville.

His wife, now employed in a Nashville hosiery mill, said she still loved her husband, but that "he would have a lot of explaining to do."

She has already spent the bonus money she has received, she said, and at the same time revealed the Veterans' Bureau had asked her to return it.

While he was gone his "body" was found floating in the Tennessee River, a bullet hole in the head. A man was arrested and tried for the murder, but was acquitted by a magistrate's court.

During the dramatic days when this man was on trial for his murder, Gifford remained quiet and out of sight.

Boys Wait Word of Father.

South Pittsburgh, Tenn., Oct. 22 (AP).—The sons of Jesse Owen Gifford learned today that their war veteran father is not dead as they had supposed.

William Gifford is 11 years old and Henry 14.

After the hosiery mill closed Mrs. Gifford moved to Nashville to work, kept the boys in school here and came home week-ends to see them.

Married 63 Years.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Flinton, Pa., Oct. 22.—Mr. and Mrs. G. G. Stevens, residents of White township all their lives, celebrated the sixty-third anniversary of their marriage. Six of their nine children are living.

'36 Advertising Award Is Given To D. C. Store

Woodward & Lothrop First of 2,000 Entered for Magazine Prize.

Woodward & Lothrop has been named winner of the award given annually by the magazine Retail Ad-News to the department store producing the best newspaper advertising of the year, it was learned yesterday. The Washington store took first place in a field of some 2,000 department stores and specialty shops.

The magazine devoted the entire front cover of its latest issue to an announcement of the award. James W. Hardey, Woodward & Lothrop's advertising manager, was praised by the magazine for his part in improving the standard of retail advertising.

In explaining its selection, the magazine stated "this store's advertising manages to combine dignity with strong leader interest, formality with sprightliness.

"In the final analysis, Woodward & Lothrop's advertising is admirably suited to a store appealing to higher-type customers."

In a statement printed on the back cover of the magazine, Advertising Manager Hardey expressed his belief in simple, restrained advertising that makes use of facts and not of superlatives.

Hardey has worked for Woodward & Lothrop for 30 years, the last 25 of which he has spent in the advertising department. He was made advertising manager seven years ago.

Jury Is Chosen to Try Mysterious Death Case

Staunton, Va., Oct. 22 (AP).—A jury was chosen today to try Raymond Carroll, charged with the mysterious assault from which 21-year-old Pauline Parry died in 1934.

Miss Parry was struck on a Waynesboro street while returning home from a carnival about midnight August 19, 1934. She died several months later at a Staunton hospital without ever regaining full consciousness a nd without making any coherent statement.

Carroll was arrested July 19 of this year and has been held in jail since that time.

A Three Days' Cough Is Your Danger Signal

A cough, chest cold or bronchial irritation today may lead to serious trouble tomorrow. You can relieve them now with Creomulsion, an emulsified Creosote that is pleasant to take. Creomulsion is a medical discovery that aids nature to soothe and heal the infected membranes and to relieve the irritation and inflammation as the germ-laden phlegm is loosened and expelled.

Medical authorities have for many years recognized the wonderful effects of Beechwood Creosote for treating coughs, chest colds and bronchial irritations. A chemist worked out a special process of blending Creosote with other ingredients so that now in Creomulsion you get a real dose of Beechwood Creosote which is palatable and can even be taken frequently and continuously by adults and children. Thousands of doctors now use Creomulsion in their own families and practice, and druggists rank Creomulsion top because in this genuine, original product you can get a real dose of Creosote so emulsified that it goes to the very seat of the trouble to help loosen and expel germ-laden phlegm.

Creomulsion is guaranteed satisfactory in the treatment of coughs, chest colds and bronchial troubles, especially those that start with a common cold and hang on and on. Get a bottle of Creomulsion right now from your druggist, use it all up as directed and if you fail to get satisfactory relief, he is authorized to refund every cent of your money. Get Creomulsion right now. (Adv.)

And it isn't just how we make our whiskey either—it's what we make it of. Each and every batch of grain gets a personal going over. But it's worth it all right. Wait till you taste this Family's Whiskey of ours!

Pledge Broken By Roosevelt, Peek Declares

New Deal Trade Policies Wrecking Agriculture, Ex-New Dealer Holds.

By the Associated Press.

Des Moines, Iowa, Oct. 22.—George N. Peek, first administrator of the AAA, declared tonight support of the Administration's reciprocal trade pacts "springs from the international banking interests centering about New York."

In an address prepared for delivery here, the former Roosevelt trade adviser criticized the agreements, accused the President of breaking promises to the farmers and approved Republican agricultural proposals.

"President Roosevelt stands for the free trade internationalism of Geneva and the international bankers," he said.

Peek contended the President favored a "regimented" agriculture and sought "unlimited political power, unhampered by the limitations imposed by courts or the Constitution." He added:

"Gov. Landon stands for free agriculture with the farmer a lord of his own land * * * and the spirit and traditions of the Constitution.

"For me there is but one course. I am for Landon."

Peek asserted farm exports "have shrunk vastly in volume" since 1932. Cotton was off 33 per cent, wheat 90, flour 42, meat products 19 and pork products 82 per cent, he said.

U. S.-Canadian Group Plans To 'Capitalize' on Quintuplets

Syndicate Takes Options on Hotels, Land and Lakes Around Callander, Ont., to Provide Accommodations for Tourists.

By the Associated Press.

Callander, Ontario, Oct. 23.—Mrs. Dionne's quintuplets appeared today as a new source of profit to American capital.

A Toronto real estate firm announced that acting for an American and Canadian syndicate, it had taken options on hotels, lakes and land hereabout with a view to providing resort accommodation for the tens of thousands who come here during the summer to see the babies.

In their less than 2½ years of life, the quintuplets have acquired more than a half million dollars as cinema stars and as indorsers of products used in their care and upbringing. Most of this fortune came in American dollars.

The proposed real estate undertaking will be the first large scale private enterprise predicated upon the existence of the quintuplets, in which the babies will not share.

The firm of Robins, Ltd., of Toronto, said details of the proposed development have not been worked out, nor have the names of the members of the syndicate been made public.

Another development which is being considered is the construction by Hollywood screen interests of a complete sound stage at an estimated cost of $50,000.

The quintuplets, who already have "made" two pictures, have two more to do under their contract.

The boom in tourist travel turned "fresh money" into a score of channels of trade. The railroads and hotels witnessed a sharp upturn in business.

And not the least of the beneficiaries of the unprecedented multiple birth of May 28, 1934, has been papa Oliva Dionne himself. Deprived, with the babies' mother, of control of the quintuplets, he made a tidy sum through a brief "personal appearance" tour, and more recently has taken in as much as $100 a day, it is said by giving his autograph to tourists at 25 cents an autograph.

Two Are Sentenced For Trawler Joyride

London, Oct. 22 (AP).—George and James Osborne, of the runaway trawler, Girl Pat, were convicted and sentenced to hard labor today for taking the vessel on an adventurous cruise which ended off the Guianan coast of South America. George was sentenced to 18 months and James to a year.

The vessel left England on what was supposed to have been a shipping trip in the North Sea, but turned up instead off the coasts of Africa and South America, presumably on a hunt for buried treasure.

Ousted Policeman Requests Hearing

Baltimore, Oct. 22 (AP).—State Policeman John E. Taylor, one of four State policemen suspended recently on charges of extortion, filed a request for a hearing on the charges today, insuring that at least part of the accusations against the men would be made public.

Taylor filed his request with Employment Commissioner Harry C. Jones, who will hold the hearing. He is represented by Milton E. Altfeld, a former State Senator from Baltimore City.

Only one charge was filed against Taylor by Maj. Enoch B. Garey, head of the State police force. Garey charged that Taylor extorted $20 from John N. Herbert, a garage owner, and that former Sergeant Albert E. Markley received half of that amount from Taylor. Markley was also suspended and was demoted.

U.S. Opens Fight On McMullen's Prison Appeal

Brief Asks Court to Uphold Ex-Colonel's Conviction for Taking $1,500 Fee.

The United States Court of Appeals yesterday was presented with briefs supporting the Government's contention Col. Joseph I. McMullen, former chief of the patents' section of the War Department was guilty of accepting a fee of $1,500 for services in connection with a pending tax bill on Cuban manganese.

Col. McMullen testified as to his activities before a House committee. His attorneys contended this testimony had carried with it immunity from criminal prosecution. Yesterday, in briefs filed in support of Col. McMullen's conviction, the Government charged that Col. McMullen could have refused "with impunity" to submit damaging testimony and held that when he did not do so it was his own fault.

John J. Wilson and David A. Pine, assistant United States attorneys, stated that, in their opinion, Col. McMullen could have pleaded constitutional immunity at the Congressional hearing and would have been released from future prosecution. Since he did not offer that plea, they said, he could not ask that his earlier rights be respected by a reversal of his conviction in District Court.

Col. McMullen was sentenced to serve from 4 months to a year. His appeal, yet pending, will be argued next month.

President Asks Consideration Of Engineering

Letter to Educators Urges Study of Affect Upon Human Life.

"Directing the attention of the Nation's leading educators to "the impact of science and engineering upon human life," President Roosevelt, in a letter sent yesterday to the heads of more than 100 schools and colleges, asked them to consider the "social responsibility" of the engineering profession.

The President enclosed with his letter a brochure entitled "Little Waters," which summed numerous conclusions of the recent Up-Stream Engineering Conference held here.

His letter said in part:

"Events of recent years have brought into clearer perspective the social responsibility of engineering.

"In respect of the impact of science and engineering upon human life—social and economic dislocations as well as advance in productive power—the facts are revealed with distressing clearness in public records of unemployment, bankruptcies and relief.

"This raises the question whether the curricula of engineering schools are so balanced as to give coming generations of engineers the vision and flexible technical capacity necessary to meet the full range of engineering responsibility.

"I am calling this matter to the attention of educators of high administrative authority in the hope that it may be thoroughly explored in faculty discussions and in meetings of engineering, educational and other pertinent professional associations."

Burned Girl, Victim In Parents' Fight, Greets Her Mother

"How are you mother? . . . yes, George has been over to see me . . . how is everything at home?"

In that commonplace manner, with no show of bitterness or hatred, did Miss Dorothy Fenwick greet her mother yesterday at their first meeting since Mrs. Mattie Martha Bray allegedly hurled a jar of gasoline in a fight with her husband and caused her 20-year-old daughter to be badly burned about the head.

Miss Fenwick, her face swathed in bandages, lay in a Gallinger Hospital ward. She was brought in last Sunday, innocent victim of a row between her mother and step-father, Samuel Bray, in their K street northwest home, 400 block.

According to police, Mrs. Bray, who is 43, threw the jar at her husband, but missed the target. The container, crashing into a wall above the stove where Miss Fenwick was frying bacon, shattered and in a moment the girl was a human torch.

The mother was arrested, her bond set at $5,000. Yesterday it was cut to $1,500 by Judge Walter J. Casey on the woman's plea she must go to her daughter's bedside.

Trusty of Jail Flees, Captured in 2 Hours

Sidney Winchester, 38, trusty, escaped the District Jail yesterday, but was capptured two hours later.

According to jail attaches, Winchester was serving time for threatening his wife. He was mowing the jail lawn when he decided to "just walk away." He was rearrested at Ninth and K streets northeast, by Edward Turnure, a jail guard.

of the peace stating there was a bondsman there who would go the bond, and naming the bondsman. Iannucci did not have the $50 needed to pay for the bond and remained in jail until the early morning, when his father arrived and paid the bonding fee.

Returned, Paid Fine.

Later, Iannucci said, he returned to Hyattsville and talked to the bondsman in the presence of the justice of the peace. The bondsman told him, the affiant said, that the minimum fine would be $101.70, which, if paid at that time, would avoid the necessity of returning for trial and save his operator's permit. Iannucci said he paid the fine to the bondsman, who gave a receipt. He did not return for trial.

It was indicated the jury will make a preliminary report on the investigation within a week, then recess until the middle of November.

Chairman Vinton D. Cockey, of the County Board of Commissioners, declared yesterday the board will investigate police regardless of what the grand jury decides.

A month ago the commissioners co-operated in the inquiry by ordering Chief Jeremiah J. Crowley to have photostatic copies of the records made. A week later they revoked their order.

At that time they emphasized "there was no investigation of the police."

Extortion Suspect Pleads Not Guilty

Accused of attempting to extort $1,000 from Samuel Einwohner, pharmacist, of 1342 Seventh street northwest, Steve Michael Terry, 18-year-old cook, entered a plea of not guilty when he was arraigned yesterday.

Terry's attorney, T. Edward O'Connell, said his client's offense was "more mental than criminal," and asked that Terry be committed to Gallinger Hospital for mental examination. However, Judge Walter J. Casey ordered the prisoner held for the grand jury under $10,000 bond.

Police arrested Terry Monday when he appeared at general delivery in the postoffice allegedly to get a "dummy" package, planted there by police. According to Detective Sergt. Curtis Trammell, Einwohner received a letter September 29, demanding $1,000 on the threat his home would be "blown up."

WHAT'S THE BEAD TEST?

This test for whiskey is as old as the hills . . . at least, as old as whiskey itself. Old-timers always shook up the bottle, noticed the amount of "bead" (bubbles) and watched how long the "bead" lasted. Today's generation forgot this old-time whiskey wisdom in the din and confusion of claims and counter-claims for whiskey. Get back to common-sense buying. Remember . . . "bead" is a natural characteristic of all whiskey . . . a guide to getting the whiskey you want. Do your own thinking, your own deciding. Pick your whiskey by the "bead test." 24 MonkeysAid Science in War With Paralysis

Mucous Membrane Tests Yield New Weapon to Fight Disease.

By the Associated Press.

New Orleans, Oct. 22.—An internal gland defense against infantile paralysis, the first ever recorded in medicine, discovered in experiments on 24 monkeys, was reported today by Dr. W. Lloyd Aycock, of Harvard Medical School, to the American Public Health Association.

One of the glands which controls growth of mucous membranes distinctly increased the resistance of monkeys to the paralysis.

One of the greatest puzzles of infantile paralysis is to find the persons who are susceptible. If that can be done, medicine already has means of protecting them. This monkey discovery, Dr. Aycock said, opens a way for solution of the puzzle.

Dr. Aycock pointed out that infantile paralysis does not attack children who are "run down" so much as those who are "run up."

The victims most often are the healthiest appearing and mentally brightest children. They are the "run up" children, normal, but whose growth, due to glands, is a little different from the average.

The monkey experiments were made on mucous membranes because in human beings it is known these linings play an important part in catching infantile paralysis.

All 24 animals were treated so that one of the endocrine glands controlling membrane growth diminished its secretions. The membrane linings all became weakened.

After that, half the monkeys were given a gland extract, estrin, which restored the weakened linings. Next, all the animals were artificially infected with infantile paralysis.

The monkeys receiving the gland extract did not catch the disease as easily as the unprotected 12. Seven of the gland-protected monkeys lived through the paralysis attack. Only two of the unprotected 12 lived.

Girl Found Drunk, Mother Arrested

A 5-year-old colored girl was reported near death in Gallinger Hospital yesterday from what physicians diagnosed as "acute alcoholism" as her mother was arrested and charged with being drunk and disorderly pending outcome of the illness.

The child, the daughter of Viola Y. Taylor, was found paralyzed from intoxication yesterday afternoon in a house in the 1200 block Staples street northeast by Ninth Precinct police. The mother was accused by police of having given the child the alcohol.

According to a report made at police headquarters, the Taylor woman lives at 1431 W street northwest, and was visiting friends in Staples street. The woman had become intoxicated and insisted the child drink some of the liquor, it is charged.

Prizeto Be Passed Out Oct. 31 Is Cut $250,000 by Latest Guessers.

By the Associated Press.

What looked like $750,000 at dawn was more like $500,000 at dusk.

From sources that leave little avenue of challenge, it was learned that the jackpot won't be much more than $500,000 when they get around to pass it out after October 31.

It isn't that the fortune has shriveled. It just never was $750,000. Charles Vance Millar—lawyer, brewer and horseman—was rich, but not that rich.

The executors—two trust companies and an attorney—could announce the exact amount, but they won't. About as far as they will go is to admit that once upon a time there was a man named Millar.

This was the way it looked tonight:

1. One of the latest arrivals in the stork derby—Mrs. Alice Timleck's No. 10—was seriously ill in a hospital.

2. Mrs. Grace Bagnato, worried sick not only by imminent childbirth but also by a flood of suggestions, offers and propositions, finally followed the example of other mothers and engaged a lawyer.

3. The Bureau of Vital Statistics indicated that it as yet has received no request for a check of its birth records.

4. There was a nervous feeling in some quarters that some dark horse mother with as novel a sense of humor as Millar had himself might pop into the picture during the final days with a truckload of entries defying competition.

But the box-score still stands.

MRS. 2 Killed, 4 Hurt In Gas Explosion

Crowley, La., Oct. 22 (U.P.).—A block-long cloud of butane gas exploded in the center of Crowley today, killing two persons, injuring four and wrecking half a dozen homes and stores.

Pouring from a leaking pipeline valve while it was being transferred from a filling station tank to a truck, the gas wafted down the street in a low-lying white fog. It was ignited by a trash fire in the courthouse square.

Five members of the Earl Shreve family were trapped in one home. All were burned; two dying in a hospital and two others reported so badly seared they were not expected to survive. An unidentified colored man was badly hurt.

Death Ends Story-Book Career of Senator James Couzens

Rose to Wealth AndFameFrom Humble Start of the creators of the Ford Motor Co., for certainly he put more than his money into the company when he joined hands with Henry Ford and a few others in 1903 to organize what was destined to become an industrial colossus.

Was Called a 'Lone Wolf,' Conscientious in His Political Beliefs.

Testifying in the greatest income tax suit the Government ever instituted—a suit to enforce collection of $30,851,659.52 from Couzens and other former minority stockholders of the Ford Motor Co.—an early associate declared: "It was due to his efforts that the company became a success. The team work of him and Mr. Ford contributed to make a bigger success than would have been possible had either gone on alone. Mr. Couzens gave the best part of his life to the company."

Terminated in 1915.

Another associate said that 50 per cent of the success of the Ford Motor Co. was due to the efforts of Mr. Couzens. "He was a hard-headed financial manager and his integrity and ability never were questioned," this associate said.

Couzens' connection with the Ford enterprise was more or less accidental in its inception. He was chosen by an earlier investor in the Ford undertaking to "protect" that investor's funds.

The partnership between Henry Ford and James Couzens terminated in 1915, the result of a sharp disagreement as to business policies. Mr. Couzens resigned as an officer of the company but retained his stock holdings. The breach later was healed, but not until after Couzens had publicly denounced the Ford Presidential boom in 1923 as "ridiculous."

But when the suit was ended instead of the Government collecting almost $10,000,000 in additional taxes from Couzens, he received a Treasury check for $989,000. The court ruled that in making his original tax return on the sale of the Ford stock Couzens had paid that much in excess of what actually was due. After that the Treasury left Couzens alone.

In the Senate he was known as a "lone wolf." His actions defied efforts to classify him as a Republican, Democrat or Progressive. At times he voted with each of these groups and on other occasions he denounced each in return. Born in Canada, he was precluded from being mentioned as a Presidential possibility, but it was frequently believed he would end up some day in the Cabinet.

Offered Borah Aid.

Although he ridiculed Henry Ford's aspirations to the Presidency, in 1924 he offered to provide financial support for the candidacy of Senator William E. Borah that year if he would seek the Presidency. But the friendship which then existed between the two men evaporated several years later and two years ago Couzens caustically assailed the Idahoan when the latter started out to purge the Republican Party of its old guard leadership. He destroyed his own chances to win a Republican renomination to the Senate by declaring for President Roosevelt.

When Couzens felt strongly about a matter—and he usually did—he never hesitated to speak out, irrespective of personages or consequences. Thus he gave a sharp dressing down one day to two leaders of his party—former Senators James E. Watson, then Senate Republican leader, and George H. Moses, President pro tem of the Senate—because they were conniving with former Senator Huey P. Long in a filibuster against a bank reform bill.

He was critical of President Roosevelt's appointment of William H. Woodin as Secretary of the Treasury, and was instrumental in having ousted from the Treasury as a special assistant to the Secretary Earl Bailie because he thought he had been too closely associated with Wall Street. He constantly fought for higher income taxes, not alone on the higher brackets, but also on the small income groups.

Going to the Senate late in 1922 as successor to Truman H. Newberry, who had resigned, Mr. Couzens soon brought criticism from several sources for his habit of plain speaking. The first was a renewed break with his old friend, Ford. It grew out of Couzens' espousal of a modification of the Volstead act. Later he brought about a senatorial investigation of the Internal Revenue Bureau and the enmity of Andrew W. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, and like Couzens, a financial giant. Shortly afterward the Government's suit to collect additional taxes from Couzens and other former minority stockholders of the Ford Co. was begun. Couzens charged the suit was retaliation on Mellon's part. The Secretary charged that the Senator had all his wealth invested in tax-exempt bonds. Mr. Couzens denied this and challenged Mr. Mellon to a public debate. The challenge was not accepted.

On his fifty-fifth birthday Mr. Couzens aroused the ire of some of his Senate colleagues by stating that "the trouble with this Senatorial job is that there isn't enough work to keep one busy. We are all overpaid. Senators' vacations are too long; we waste too much time."

Urged Conservation Corps.

Couzens was an early advocate of many measures later adopted by the Franklin Roosevelt Administration. Among these was a plan from which grew the Civilian Conservation Corps, direct relief for the unemployed, unemployment insurance and social security measures. He urged higher income taxes and was a consistent proponent of publicity on income tax returns.

President Roosevelt appointed him as the only Republican member of the American delegation to the world economic conference at London in May, 1933. There the outspoken Senator created a sensation by saying the United States would not stabilize the dollar at that time nor take any other international step which might retard recovery in America.

The Michigan Bank collapse in February, 1933, opened a period described by Couzens as the most difficult in his career. Detroit bankers charged that he had blocked a plan to keep the banks open and had withdrawn large sums just before the crash.

"This will be your authority to examine my account in any bank in Michigan," he telegraphed in reply to one critic.

Wilson W. Mills, former chairman of the board of the First National Bank of Detroit, charged at a grand jury investigation that Couzens' refusal to sanction $6,200,000 of a $43,700,000 Reconstruction Finance Corporation loan to the Union Guardian group of banks was the sole cause of the collapse.

"That is an absolute untruth," Couzens testified in return. He said he had not opposed $37,700,000 of the loan but did oppose a larger sum because "all Washington officials, from the President down," deemed the collateral insufficient.

Threatened Denunciation.

He added that Charles A. Miller, then chairman of the RFC, had said that the Union Guardian group proposed to use assets of its stronger units to bolster the others.

"I told President Hoover that if the loan was allowed on that basis I would denounce it from the housetops," he testified. "Wild and illegal high financing through consolidations and group banks caused the debacle in Detroit."

When the Senate Banking Committee investigated the Detroit troubles Couzens assisted Ferdinand Pecora, committee counsel, in questioning the witnesses. Political wiseacres saw a popular reaction to the Senator's stand when, a week after the investigation opened, Couzens' son was elected Mayor of Detroit by a margin of 2 to 1.

The Senator was sharply critical of some Roosevelt Administration measures. He denounced the $4,800,000,000 work relief bill as likely to foster fascism and forced labor. He opposed regulations for uniform bidding under NRA codes and voted against increasing the size of the Army.

The success that came to Mr. Couzens with the prosperity of the Ford Motor Co. brought with it realization of a dream that long had been close to his heart—a desire to help the cause and welfare of unfortunate children. A long list of charitable benefactions, mainly in behalf of children, was climaxed in April, 1929, when Mr. Couzens established a $10,000,000 trust fund which, with its income, estimated to amount to $7,500,000 additional, was to be spent in full within 25 years to promote the health and happiness of the children of Michigan and elsewhere. The gift brought his total benefactions up to approximately $20,000,000.

In some quarters it was said the Senator in announcing the gift was fulfilling a promise he made that if his fight against the additional tax assessment was successful he would give the entire amount to charity. Had he lost in the suit, Mr. Couzens would have had to pay the Government $9,455,303.10 plus interest.

In May, 1935, Couzens added $2,156,675 to the children's fund by a gift of securities. Not long afterward it was announced he had given $550,000 to supplement a Government grant of $300,000 for a workingman's home project near Pontiac, Mich.

One biographer of Mr. Couzens has written, "If one sets out to analyze the character of James Couzens, he finds it was molded of many things, of self-control, of self-denial, of hard labor, of unselfish expenditure of great energy for the common weal, for example, but, above all, of a great charity."

Before he went to the United States Senate Mr. Couzens was Police Commissioner and Mayor of Detroit—and gave away most of his salary.

He was born in Chatham, Ontario, August 26, 1872, the son of James Joseph and Emma (Clift) Couzens. He was educated in the public schools and attended high school one year. His father operated a soap factory. On August 31, 1898, he married Miss Margaret A. Manning, of Detroit. They had four children, two sons and two daughters.

To write the story of the life of James Couzens is to tell a large part of the history of the Ford Motor Co.

Couzens went to Detroit when he was 18 years old and obtained a job as a car checker at $40 a month. Previously he had been a train butcher between Sarnia and Ronceau, Ontario. He spent five years at car checking and then went into the offices of the Michigan Central Railroad.

From the railroad offices he went with A. Y. Malcomson as bookkeeper in a coal yard, later to become manager of a branch office in Toledo.

It was in 1903 that Henry Ford and James Couzens met and the industrial epic of Detroit began. It came about through Malcomson, who in offering to advance Ford some capital to start his third automotive venture stipulated that he (Malcomson) should name a representative in the management. The man he named was James Couzens and Couzens' duty was to see that the $3,000 Malcomson had promised to advance was not needlessly dissipated and also to try to line up investors.

Couzens became secretary of the company, but to the men who worked in the plants he really was regarded as the general manager. For 13 years he was the business brains of the greatest of motor factories. The company met with immediate financial success. In the first year it paid out $12,000 in dividends. Mr. Couzens originally purchased 25 shares at $100 a share, paying $1,000 in cash and giving notes for the remainder. Subsequently he acquired 85 additional shares and when a stock dividend of 1,900 per cent was declared he came into possession of a total of 2,180 shares.

It generally has been regarded as largely due to Couzens' keen financial administration that up to the time the stock of the minority share holders was taken over by Henry and Edsel Ford in 1919, total dividends paid out by the company amounted to $96,290,385.96. This was 16 years after the company was organized.

Received 29 Million.

When Mr. Couzens finally sold his 2,180 shares of stock to Henry and Edsel Ford he received $29,308,857.90. In his income tax return for 1919 he paid the Government $7,281,807.59. The Treasury later declared this was insufficient by $9,455,303.10.

That Mr. Couzens put more than the original $2,500 investment into the Ford Motor Co. was attested to by the fact that he was gray-haired by the time he was 40, although as vigorous as any man could be at that age.

An interesting phase of the Couzens career was written in his own financial affairs as they developed with the Ford Motor Co. When Mr. Couzens started as secretary of the company his salary was put at $200 a month. After Mr. Ford had purchased the Malcomson stock in 1906, thus obtaining majority control, Mr. Couzens was made a director and treasurer to succeed Malcomson.

A few months later Mr. Couzens wrote Mr. Ford asking for an increase in salary.

"I think you are fully conversant," he wrote, "with the amount of work and responsibilities involved in my work and particularly during the last year as well as the present time; also that the compensation is not in accordance with what others in like positions in other companies are receiving. You said I should receive $10,000 per annum and an amount on each car sold." He asked 90 cents on every "Model N" sold, and $3 for every "K Model" delivered.

His request was granted. A year later the salary was increased to $25,000 a year and in January, 1906, stockholders voted to increase Ford's and Couzens' salaries to $75,000 a year each. When Mr. Couzens left the company in 1915, following the disagreement with Mr. Ford, his salary was $150,000 a year.

"I had disagreed with Mr. Ford's utterances on finance, unpreparedness and about everything else of late," he was quoted as saying. "I was quite willing to work with Mr. Ford, but not for him."

The split, though final, seemingly did not result in any bitterness.

Was Rail Commissioner.

Mr. Couzens' first public office was that of street railway commissioner. Later he became police commissioner and then Mayor of Detroit. It was as street railway commissioner that he conceived the thought of municipal ownership of the city's street railway system and it was under his administration as mayor that the city finally took over the privately owne diraction system.

Until he became police commissioner. Mr. Couzens never had been in a police station. He even had to ask what a "handbook" was. As police commissioner, he was responsible for the elimination of organized vice in Detroit.

He also was largely responsible as mayor for the creation of Detroit's system of caring for persons who might suffer through business depression. The plan was accepted by President Harding's unemployment conference in 1921. Mr. Couzens stimulated public work to furnish jobs and at the same time made available all the money the public relief department needed to prevent suffering. He raised it by taxation.

"When you have a team of horses and no work for it, you feed it and care for it just the same," he said. "Our wokmen deserve just as good treatment as our horses."

When in November, 1922, after Truman H. Newberry had resigned from the Senate, Mr. Couzens was appointed to succeed him over the protest of Detroit civic leaders who argued with Gov. Alex J. Groesbeck that Mr. Couzens' value to the city as mayor was of paramount importance.

In the Senate he soon brought down upon himself criticism from various quarters by coming out for modification of the Volstead act. To the storm of protest he replied with numerous speeches advocating "old fashioned beer."

Then followed the controversy with Secretary Mellon that brought sharp words on both sides. It continued after Mr. Couzens was elected in 1934 to serve the full term, and probably had its final outburst in March, 1928, when Mr. Couzens introduced a resolution in the Senate demanding Mr. Mellon's resignation. The resolution was pigeon-holed.

The Couzens-Ford break came out into the open in 1923. It was shortly after Mr. Couzen" espousal of a modification of the prohibition law. Ford severely criticized Couzens for his stand. Ford suggested that the military and naval forces be used to enforce prohibition. This in turn was attacked by Mr. Couzens. Mr. Ford said Mr. Couzens was advocating modification merely to keep himself in the public eye. It was about that time the "Ford-for-President" boom was underway. In a prepared speech before the Detroit Republican Club on October 31, 1923, Couzens bitterly denounced the Ford boom.

Reading from his manuscript and seeking to keep his voice under control, Mr. Couzens said:

"Not only do I want to save Mr. Ford from the greatest humiliation that ever could befall a man, but I want equally to save the United States Government from the humiliation it would suffer if a man of Mr. Ford's experience and training got into the White House.

"I never loved a man and thought so much of a man in his place as I do Henry Ford. There never was a man who was kinder and more thoughtful to me than Henry Ford, and I wouldn't make this statement now, even though he has charged me with insincerity of purpose, except that he is a candidate for the Presidency of the United States."

Ford Backed Coolidge.

A few weeks later Henry Ford came out for Calvin Coolidge for President, and it was not long afterward that Ford and Couzens were seeing each other again, at family social functions and other times.

Mr. Couzens gave millions to charity and in this was joined by Mrs. Couzens. The exact amount perhaps never will be known, but it was well in excess of $20,000,000. Invariably these benefactions had as their inspiration the plight of handicapped or under-developed children. Hundreds of thousands of dollars were given each year to orphanages, children's hospitals and nurses' homes. To the Children's Hospital, of Michigan, he gave approximately $2,000,000 and promised more as the need arose. When in 1927, a mad man set off an explosion that wrecked the schoolhouse at Bath, Mich., and killed 44 children, Mr. Couzens promptly rebuilt the school at a cost of $75,000.

"Senator Couzens always has been deeply interested in children of tender years, especially those who are sick or handicapped. He feels these little children are not here by their own choice, and are not in any way responsible for their physical disabilities, and that justice demands their difficulties be alleviated or cured; that their lives be made happy and agreeable, and with as little suffering as possible."

In the lobby of the schoolhouse at Bath, Mich., is a small bronze statue that symbolizes probably better than anything else Mr. Couzens' conception of what childhood should mean. It is the statue of a smiling girl. Happiness is written in the face and posture of the child. Under one arm is a kitten. Nearby on a bronze plate are the names of the 44 children whose lives were snuffed out by the explosion of May, 1927.

Notables Hold Couzens Death Loss to Nation

Cabinet Officers, Colleagues Express Regret at His Passing.

By the Associated Press.

Cabinet officers, Senator and others high in official life joined last night in praising the career of Senator James Couzens, who died in Detroit.

One of the first tributes came from Senator Gore (Democrat), Oklahoma, with whom Couzens frequently differed in debate.

"Senator Couzens' death is a great loss to his State and country," Gore said. "I thought very highly of him, because he followed his principles and convictions wherever they led."

Secretary Perkins sent the following telegram to Mrs. Couzens:

"You and your family have my deepest sympathy. Senator Couzens was an outstanding citizen and statesman and his death is a loss to the Nation which he served with such distinction as a member of the United States Senate since 1922."

Other comment included: Secretary Morgenthau: "The passing of Senator Couzens came to me as a tremendous personal shock. He possessed an independence and a breadth of vision that made him outstanding in the public life of his day. His death will be a loss to his country, but his work and influence will long remain."

Harry L. Hopkins, Works Progress administrator: "The State of Michigan and the Nation have lost a great humanitarian in the death of Senator Couzens."

Farley Mourns Loss.

New York, Oct. 22 (AP).—Democratic Chairman James A. Farley, in a statement tonight said "the whole Nation must mourn the death of Senator Couzens.

"He distinguished himself in the public service by a rare display of courage and candor on all occasions. He valued conviction above expediency. His services were particularly valuable during the stressful period from which the country is now emerging. I feel a sense of personal loss at his passing."

Courage Praised.

Joplin, Mo., Oct. 22 (AP).—Senator Joseph T. Robinson, of Arkansas, majority floor leader of the Senate, informed here tonight of the death of Senator James Couzens, declared the Michigan Senator had displayed "notable energy and courage" while a member of Congress and said his death was a great loss to the public.

Welfare Head Charges D. C. Fails To Meet 75 Pct. of Child Problem

Lack of Facilities Under Outmoded Juvenile Court Blamed.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

A new deal for District delinquents and improved legislation for children born out of wedlock are two projects that have long enlisted the interest of Washington welfare workers.

Meanwhile, the latest report of the child welfare division to the Welfare Board revealed the need of new provisions for the neglected child. "The present combined resources of the Juvenile Court and the child welfare division are not meeting one-fourth of the situations brought to their attention requiring supervision of neglected children in their homes," said Miss A. Patricia Morss, chief of the division. "The child welfare law will have to be amended before all the destitute and neglected minors can be properly cared for in the District."

At present there is no public agency in the Capital equipped to give supervision to neglected children in their own homes, which might be rehabilitated if they could be kept under the supervision of either the Board of Public Welfare or the Juvenile Court.

During the past year only two workers were available for the 341 cases that came to the attention of the children's protective service, Miss Morss said. "And often the programs of these workers had to be interrupted to give them time to attend other emergencies," she went on.

Might Obviate Public Care.

"We feel that if there were enough workers to give adequate casework service to dependent and neglected children, the necessity of public care in many cases would be obviated."

She further pointed out that under the existing program, protection of children is often not available until the case is so serious it requires court action. "Yet we are convinced that the best way to help most neglected children is to prevent conditions which deprive children of the care of their parents," she said. "But in order to do this in every case, we must have a larger staff of case workers."

In almost 60 per cent of the neglect situations brought to the attention of the child welfare division last year, conflict between parents resulting in divorce or separation was the chief factor in the disorganization of the home. Miss Morss and members of her staff are of the opinion that many homes can be saved and many parents brought back together if skilled workers are assigned to guide comparatively helpless mothers and fathers when their difficulties first become apparent.

"Far too great a proportion of our services are brought into play after homes are entirely broken up, after there is no chance of adjustments," said Miss Morss. "Our work with children when family fireside foundations have crumbled convinces us that in many instances these tragedies could be prevented if case workers were called in soon enough. This is the type of personal service that results in saving money for the State and in preserving the child's welfare."

Homes Re-established.

In some instances, unstable homes have been re-established on a sound basis by skillful workers who found time from other duties to help fathers and mothers work out difficulties that threatened to result in divorce. For example, there was the case of a child who was stranded in a hospital when his parents refused to take him home after his recovery from an illness caused by faulty nutrition.

Investigation revealed that the father was unemployed and that the mother fancied herself ill, was a poor manager and had little interest in housekeeping. At the time the child was deserted, home ties were completely broken. Each parent had decided to go his own way and leave the boy to be taken care of by someone else.

Hospital authorities turned the child over to the juvenile court, which referred him to the child welfare division. A worker was assigned the seemingly impossible task of rehabilitating the home so the abandoned boy could have the care to which he was entitled. The long slow process began as soon as it was discovered that both the husband and wife wished for a reconciliation and wanted the child back on the condition that the agency would continue guardianship until it was proved "things would really go."

Work Relief For Father.

Work relief was obtained for the father. A physician's service was enlisted for the mother, so she could know exactly the condition of her health and the necessity for observing regular hours and getting the proper amount of rest and food. Under the guidance of the welfare worker, she learned how to systematize her housework, budget her funds and care for her child. Through the same medium, the father learned how to bring about an understanding between himself and his wife to the end that the little home eventually was satisfactorily reconstructed. The parents, in fulfilling their duties to the child, won happiness. The child was saved from an institution.

This illustrates how money and time can be profitably spent in "putting parents on the job"—a program that welfare workers feel is more beneficial to the child and, in the long run, less expensive to the public, than the easier way of turning the neglected child over to an institution at once. But where a few cases were given the benefit of such exhaustive personal service the past year, dozens could not be, because of the small number of case workers now on the staff of the child welfare division.

A larger staff is also needed to take care of the boarding home program for problem children. While Miss Morss admitted that an increase in staff would necessarily increase the expenditure service for boarding house care, she also stressed that the former "would ultimately reduce the cost of the more expensive form of institutional care, and would generally be much more beneficial to the child."

Need Cited for Modern Approach in Handling Neglected Cases.

(A further discussion for the proposed program for problem children will be given tomorrow in The Post.)

Church to Renew Call to Minister

Knoxville, Tenn., Oct. 22 (AP).—The Knoxville Presbytery of the Southern Presbyterian Church today lent its strength for the second time to the First Church's call for the Rev. E. B. McGukin, of Winchester, Va., who is so popular with his Virginia congregation that it doesn't want to let him go.

A previous call made by the First Church here was rejected by the Winchester Presbytery, although the Rev. Mr. McGukin said he had decided to accept it.

Hugh Vance, an elder of the First Church, said that the second call would be forwarded immediately to the Winchester Presbytery, and that a delegation of First Church members would go there to prosecute the call. If their plea is rejected, Vance said, an appeal may be taken to the Virginia Synod.

Inquiry Opens On Ad Profits Of Democrats

Senate Committee Requests Party to State if Money Is Contribution.

By the Associated Press.

An inquiry into the sale of $357,475 of advertising space in the Democratic Party's National Convention book was announced yesterday by the Senate committee investigating campaign expenditures.

It asked the Democratic National Committee to explain whether the money received from various corporations "represented the true value of advertising matter in the publication, or * * * an additional political contribution."

W. Forbes Morgan, treasurer of the Democratic committee, said the book was "handled in identically the same fashion as the Republican convention book."

Under the corrupt practices act, any donation by a corporation in connection with a Presidential election may be punished by fine and imprisonment.

Reports from the Democratic National Committee to the clerk of the House showed the profit on publishing and selling the convention book was about $345,000.

Among the corporations purchasing advertising were a number whose officials have opposed Roosevelt Administration policies, including the United States Steel Corporation, which purchased $5,000 worth; Ford Motor Co., $4,000, and Remington-Rand, of Buffalo, N. Y., $5,000.

Included in the 91 purchasers of more than $100 worth of copies of the book were the Inland Steel Co., Chicago, $1,000; United Mine Workers of America, $1,250; Chilean Nitrate Educational Bureau, Inc., $2,500, and the Falstaff Brewing Co., St. Louis, $1,250.

Suit to Bar 600 Voters Dropped

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Martinsburg, W. Va., Oct. 22.—Action to strike from the absentee voter registration list in this county more than 600 names of persons on the ground they were not bona fide Berkeley County residents, was dropped this afternoon after several hours of argument before Berkeley County Court.

The matter was dismissed when Frank Parrick, of Washington, counsel for the plaintiff, J. William Kastle, this city, chairman of the county Republican executive committee, concurred in the view of counsel for the defendants that there was a question as to whether the defendants had been given sufficient time to answer and also whether the use of a registered letter to their last-known address was sufficient.

U. S. Considers Transatlantic Zeppelin Line

By Robert C. Albright.

American participation in transatlantic zeppelin service between the United States and Germany was projected into the near future yesterday, contingent on construction and operating subsidies to be asked of the next Congress.

Tentative agreement to recommend dirigible subsidy amendments to the merchant marine act has been reached by Commerce Department officials, it was learned. A private group, willing to promote the enterprise of it has Government backing, is said to be forming in this country.

Proposals are understood to call for leasing to an American company of a German sister ship to the dirigible Hindenberg, until such time as the American company completes a vessel. The German ship is now under construction.

Terminal facilities and personnel would be interchanged. Sites now under consideration for terminal construction include both Hybla Valley, Va., south of Alexandria, and Morristown, N. J.

It was learned that Germany is not considering outright sale of a dirigible to this country and if the proposed American company made use of a German vessel in order to put the service into operation, it would have to be chartered.

Extensive negotiations have been conducted in this country by Dr. Hugo Eckener, German dirigible designer, both with Government officials and private interests. It was following a recent conference with Secretary of Commerce Roper and J. Monroe Johnson, Assistant Secretary, that the tentative decision to frame formal legislative proposals was reached. The Commerce Department disavows any "official" negotiations with Eckener. Stress was laid on the need for private backing.

But necessary private capital for an American transatlantic airship company will be underwritten by American business men only if Congress manifests its interest in the undertaking by providing adequate construction and operating subsidies for American builders and operators, to place them on a competitive basis with foreign flagships, it is understood.

Tentatively, proposals call for construction of two large rigid airships suitable for transoceanic operations, to alternate with two foreign airships in giving regular service. Both presumably would be built in this country. It requires two years to construct a dirigible so chartering of a German ship in the early stages, and interchange of personnel for training purposes, is being discussed.

Not Such Nice Discrimination.

It is a sorry fact that the spirit of intolerance and suppression which animates European dictatorships is by no means wholly absent here in the United States. Among various instances of incipient fascism, in the sense of effort to suppress opinions deemed undesirable by those in authority, may be cited one from Long Island.

Some days ago the American Labor Party, an offshoot of the right-wing of the Socialist Party of New York, sought to obtain permission to hold a political rally in a Mineola public building. The request was turned down, no reason being given by the police officer in charge. With suspicious celerity a spokesman of the Republican organization in Nassau County, in which Mineola is located, has rushed forward to explain.

The American Labor Party, he asserts, is "frankly communistic in its tendencies" and behind its desire for a political rally in Mineola are "subversive purposes." But all this sounds like overworked camouflage, in view of the fact that no such protests have been raised by the local Republicans against the more radical Socialist Party holding a meeting in the same hall.

As it happens, the Socialists are supporting their own candidate for the Presidency and he has no chance of being elected. The American Labor Party, however, is working for President Roosevelt and Gov. Lehman. Apparently that makes a difference to Nassau County Republicans; so much so that they have found it necessary to raise the bogus red issue in one case but not in the other.

The target of the action may be Mr. Roosevelt. But the victim is Mr. Landon, whose forthright stand in favor of the fundamentals of American freedom is thus traduced by his own supporters.

The Railroads' Petition.

Yesterday the Class I railroads filed a petition with the ICC, asking for modification of certain outstanding rate orders and for relief from the long and short haul, and water-competition provisions of the ICC act.

This action is preliminary to a proposed revision of freight rates designed to replace in part the revenue lost by the expiration of emergency charges at the end of December. At the same time the roads are also seeking to bring about comprehensive readjustments in the freight rate structure, in accordance with suggestions of the commission.

The present emergency rate increases have been in effect since April, 1935, having been extended in modified form on a somewhat lower basis for a six months period from the end of last June. In their petition the roads point out that without these increases they would have failed to earn fixed charges—that is interest, rentals and taxes—by about $60,600,000 during the first eight months of 1936. In spite of pronounced improvement in the volume of freight traffic, gross revenues are still 30 per cent below the level of 1930, while earnings during the current year have average only 2.3 per cent on the property investment as compared with a return of 3.45 per cent in the corresponding period of 1930. Thus it is "self-evident," the petition states, that the roads are "not in a position to withstand the loss of revenue which would result from the elimination of the emergency charges." Even with the proposed rates, it is explained, they "will still be in dire need of additional revenues which are to be obtained, if at all, only in the event of a very substantial increase in the present volume of traffic."

The time has come to consider some general readjustment of the freight rate structure which has been dealt with only in a temporary, piece-meal manner during the past six critical years. For that reason the proposed filing of new tariffs for the purpose of consolidating, modifying and modernizing the existing rate structure is a development of great importance.

Careful consideration of the current petition may require a great deal of time because of the number of roads involved, and the many interests affected. It may well prove impossible to reach a decision as to the long-time readjustments of rates by the end of the year. In that case, a temporary extension of the emergency rates to bridge a threatened hiatus between the present and the probable future rate structure would be highly desirable.

Such action would prevent many disturbing developments, such as undue stimulation of commodity movements in anticipation of increases in rates, or deferred shipments in other cases, because of uncertainty or in hope of rate increases. At all times, but especially during this period of business recovery, regularity of production and of transportation is most important.

Apparently a temporary extension of the emergency charges would meet with little opposition. In fact, as the ICC said in its last annual report, "there has been on the whole, little complaint from the shipping public against the payment of the surcharges, or emergency charges as they are commonly called." Under the circumstances the interests of the public, as well as that of the roads, would seemingly be furthered by maintenance of the status quo, pending final decision on the proposed readjustments of the freight rate structure.

"Democracy In Taxation."

In his Worcester address President Roosevelt presented himself to a cheering multitude as the advocate of "democracy in taxation." Taxes, he said, should be levied according to ability to pay. "That is the only American principle."

Few students of taxation would quarrel with this sound statement of principle, although they might point out that it can scarcely be called an American discovery. As the President proceeded to develop his thesis, however, it soon became evident that his conception of a democratic system of taxation is one that concentrates the tax burden upon a limited number of rich people. While this is good soap-box oratory the underlying theory is much more communistic than democratic.

Blithely minimizing the fact that preceding Republican Administrations had reduced a war-inherited debt about $8,000,000,000 between 1921 and 1930, the President excoriated his predecessors for failing to make deeper cuts. They might have done so, he thundered, except that to pay political debts "they reduced the taxes of their friends in the higher brackets and left the national debt to be paid by later generations."

It might be inferred, therefore, that President Roosevelt, who has blithely added $13,000,000,000 to the public debt since he assumed office, will improve on his predecessors by democratically applying the doctrine of taxation according to ability to pay, on two million $2,000 incomes as well as on two $2,000,000 incomes. That, however, does not appear to have been the purpose of this retrospective glance at the shortcomings of other administrations, since he hastened to say that a balanced budget is on the way without any new or increased taxes. Indeed, he even anticipates a reduction in the debt "very soon," words which somehow sound vaguely familiar.

The major part of this demagogic rhapsody was of course composed to convey the impression that somehow all the revenue needed to put our finances in order has been or can be obtained from the economic royalists. Taxation according to ability to pay means to Mr. Roosevelt merely avoiding direct taxation for those who hold the balance of voting power. At least that is the moral to be drawn for another ten days.

He also claims that, exclusive of liquor taxes, the present Administration has made a great proportional reduction in the indirect taxes imposed upon the people, leaving his hearers to conclude that the consuming masses are rapidly being relieved from all taxation. This theme appears again in his defense of the undistributed profits as a means of preventing tax evasion by men with large incomes. Although experts almost to a man have condemned this punitive levy as an unsound measure, the President relegates all dissenters to the limbo of "propagandists" to which he habitually consigns all critics who may venture to doubt his all-encompassing wisdom.

Summed up, the Worcester message seems designed to intoxicate the voting multitudes, for the next few days, with the comforting suggestion that somebody else will pay the huge bills that have been incurred by the Roosevelt Administration. Of course nobody with any concern for the facts seriously believes that the budget can be balanced and the debt reduced without imposing heavy tax burdens upon the people at large.

Thanks to the Supreme Court, and to the President's obvious disappointment, we have been rid of various sales taxes which added to the cost of food and clothing for the common man. But statistics outweighing those cited by Mr. Roosevelt at Worcester were revealed in the testimony of an assistant general counsel for the Treasury Department who told the Senate Finance Committee that in 1930 taxes bearing most heavily upon the consumer constituted only 31.8 per cent of receipts, while they had mounted to 61.3 per cent in 1935.

Taxes constitute a deduction from the income of the people, and whenever the cost of government rises to the point of taking a large percentage of that income, it is certain that the consuming masses will in one way or another be forced to contribute a growing share of tax receipts. By resort to statistical gymnastics the character and the extent of the burden may be minimized. But it will be none the less felt in rising costs of living which reduce the real wages and salaries of the working classes.

The only way to lighten these impositions lies in a reduction in the volume of Government spending. The President has nothing to say about that method of tax relief when he makes his appeal for what he is pleased to call "democracy in taxation."

A Very Dangerous Racket.

Smoke over Prince Georges County has stirred the grand jury into a search for fire. Indications are that the dollars of many an arrested motorist have never reached the county treasury but have gone instead to line the pockets of a combine said to exist between certain police officers and bondsmen.

The racket appears to have worked when a bondsman could convince the motorist that a forfeit of his bond would prevent the revocation of his driving permit. This done, the charge seems to have been entered surreptitiously on police records by a conniving officer as a minor offense which required only a small fine. The difference between the fine and the bond has apparently been divided between the officers and the bondsmen. So scandalous are the results of preliminary investigations that already a special grand jury inquiry into the entire county police force is being discussed. If the early evidence bears up, such action would seem to be mandatory.

The traffic problem is difficult enough without graft added to it. An innate—and, in most cases, unjustified—suspicion that every highway patrolman is spoiling for an arrest is already widespread. This suspicion can only be strengthened by the revelations in Prince Georges County, and highway safety on all sides suffers thereby.

A roadway is as safe as the public's respect for the traffic laws and those who enforce them. And other local communities might well take a tip from the inquiry now under way. For where one patch of decay is uncovered, another is usually hidden near by.

Issues Above Personalities.

During the present campaign there has been a lively exchange of personalities, sometimes to the neglect of the major issues that call for discussion. However, the political contests of the present day are much more free than formerly from underhand efforts to besmirch the private life and character of candidates for office.

This growth of decency indicates that the public is inclined to apply more discriminating tests of fitness, although increased immunity from merely malicious attacks does not protect a man who seeks office from a searching scrutiny of his past business or professional record.

On the contrary, as interest in a candidate's intimate personal life wanes, those acts and activities that throw light upon his honesty and integrity gain in importance. The charges brought against Judge Bleakley, the Republican candidate for Governor of New York, tending to cast doubt upon the disinterestedness of his conduct while a justice of the Supreme Court, are a case in point.

Provided critics are only interested in getting at the facts, and enabling voters to judge of the probable fitness of a candidate for high office, such attacks are permissible, especially if presented in a way that permits adequate defense. Delving into past records simply to unearth episodes that may prejudice a candidate's chances of success, for reasons not related to his personal fitness, is, on the other hand, fortunately no longer a popular sport.

Two Curtains Go Up.

It seems illogical to search for a common ground on which such plays as "Sleeping Beauty" and "Caesar and Cleopatra" may be compared. The first is pure fantasy and designed wholly for the pleasure of children. The Shavian satire has subtleties obviously outside the ken of any but the adult mind. But they are mentioned in the same breath at this time because both are playing here this week and both are undertakings to be noted with pride by civic-minded Washingtonians. And if the theater is primarily, as H. L. Mencken claims, "a place for diverting representation," then a comparison is not at all beside the point.

The Children's Theater has amply fulfilled a promising beginning and is tomorrow entering its fifth season here. The Washington Civic Theater's curtain went up for the first time Wednesday night. The excellence of the cast and settings in that debut should go far toward grounding its director's hopes that eventually this city will see "first-rate acting in a first-rate legitimate play every night in the week." Stage managers, prop men, costume designers, ushers and actors are all Washingtonians, making the venture a truly civic one.

The Children's Theater is no longer an experiment. It has earned the accolade of discriminating parents who wish their children's knowledge of the playhouse rooted in those juvenile classics which never grow old or stale. The Washington Civic Theater, in its opening performance, happily demonstrated what may be expected from it in the way of sincerity, originality, and able acting. These are excellent additions to the amenities of Washington as a place to live, in the fullest sense of the word.

It isn't so much for the sake of going somewhere that causes people to be so fond of travel. It's the subconscious atavistic idea that they're escaping from something.

There are too many persons who think the only way to have a good time is to make fools of themselves.

Kids vs. Mutts.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Let us hope we have heard the last of "Sporty," the mutt who almost caused a riot because he was picked up by the dog catcher. I note that the good citizens immediately went into action, taking up collections and what not.

Little Johnny Jones can go out on the street and sell papers or run errands when he should be in school but cannot because his parents are too poor to keep him and nobody cares a hoot. Little Jimmie Smith can need an operation on his eyes, but has to do without because his parents cannot afford it and again nobody worries. But let some mangy hound be thrown into a pound wagon where he belongs and the populace works itself up into a hysteria.

Speeches are made, hand-drawn pictures from life fill the newspaper and everyone becomes indignant. Sporty and his brethren can keep the neighborhood awake with their howling, but let a hand be put upon them and cries rent the air. I do blame the dog catcher for striking the boy, but it is clear that there was interference with the man's paid duty.

When will this sobbing and crying over animals stop? Not soon, what with private graveyards and expensive tomb stones for pets while worthwhile humans live and die in squalor. People can starve and rot, but poor Sporty and others of his kind must have their bones and attention.

Reckless Pedestrians.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In a recent letter to The Post, Perry B. Daniel insisted that if careless motorists are to be reprimanded and fined, so should the jay-walker be punished likewise. My contention has been that the right-hand turn on a red light creates what we term "jay-walkers" and I have said it should be abandoned. However, I believe I have erred, not in my contention that the right-hand turn on red should be abandoned, but in confusing "jay-walkers" and pedestrians who cross the streets against red lights with the careful pedestrian who makes an honest effort to cross streets when the light is for him or her.

The jay-walker who takes chances, walking in a zig-zag course and crossing in the middle of a street, and the person who crosses a street against the red light, should be handed a summons and haled to police court. A series of such instances, with the court fining violators, might stop this nuisance. The majority of pedestrians here are careful and have a deep respect for the law. It is the minority which is disregarding it.

I sometimes think it would be a good idea if careful pedestrians who stand before the curbs to await the change of lights, would endeavor to educate hoodlums, such as the careless pedestrian, by pointing out the danger lying ahead of a misstep. The same can be said of automobile drivers. There are good drivers and bad ones—the same as elsewhere. And the bad drivers are in the minority. But we cannot expect good drivers to jump out of cars to warn bad ones of the danger ahead. That's a job for the police and the courts. And the latter are doing a good job of it, too.

Recovery Performance.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: One year and a half ago, President Roosevelt declared that if the NRA and AAA were abandoned "wheat would drop to 36 cents a bushel and cotton would drop to 5 cents a pound" and a whole lot of other political bunk.

The very first week of this year saw the end of triple A; and the NRA had already been "abandoned;" yet today wheat is selling not at 36 cents a bushel but at $1.16 a bushel, and cotton is not selling at 5 cents a pound but at 12 cents a pound. Of course, those prices are in 60-cent dollars, for the President has devalued our dollar, and to get the real price 40 per cent ought to be deducted, which would make wheat at 70 cents and cotton at about 8 cents.

The President has deliberately stated that all this New Deal foolishness, 90 per cent of which was absolutely unconstitutional and wiped out by the Supreme Court as unconstitutional, has brought about such recovery as we have. Today we have over 10,000,000 unemployed, and about 20,000,000 on relief, and a $10,000,000,000 increase in indebtedness. At no time during the depression were there more on relief or more unemployed than there have been at some time during this year.

Every other country in the world—even the most backward countries—is better recovered from the recent world-wide depression than the United States, in spite of our greater recuperative powers. If President Roosevelt is to be credited with world-wide recovery, as he asserts, then he has been proalien and un-American in fixing up all these New Deal experimentations so that they brought about recovery to every other foreign land first and to us last and least. For such an un-American thing, which he admits by his own boastful claims, he ought to be defeated on November 3.

It Seems We Are Kidded.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: What dull dogs your editorial staff threatens to become. In the past one may not always have agreed with them, but they have seemed to preserve a laudable sense of proportion—a faculty of smiling deftly at the passionate absurdities of a political campaign. They gave their writing that subtle touch of gaiety without which none of us could long remain sane in this mad old world.

But alas and alack—Thursday we find them solemnly rebuking the President for his deliciously droll flings at his stodgy critics. Can it be that the distinguished staff which gave us a Pulitzer prize winner (of which all your readers are so proud) is really being frightened by Chief Bogey Man Frank Knox? Do they really think their "life insurance and savings bank accounts are valueless?"

Do they too feel that "every member of the Democratic Party should be put in jail" and that the distinguished Governor of Pennsylvania "has no more sense of responsibility than a 10-year-old boy?" Better keep your eye on 'em. One of these sunny afternoons you are liable to find them on their hands and knees in the middle of Pennnsylvania avenue looking for "blades of grass."

And now, just confidentially and to relieve their jittery nerves—none of us who hold sincerely and devotedly with the liberal political philosophy of the President believe all the things we are now saying. If the unexpected should occur and Mr. Landon should come in, we know that the little coterie of fine liberal Western newspaper men about him would quickly form the nucleus of a very stiff interference against the "princes of special privilege." The du Ponts and the Liberty Leaguers would in the end be stopped in their tracks long before they were close enough to make a touchdown and take over the Government.

But we are worried about those fine young writing men of yours. Watch 'em closely—light diet, plenty of sleep and perhaps a mild sedative is indicated—and oh, yes—they won't like this, but all strong stimulants positively forbidden. Because the goblin "is goin' to git 'em if they don't watch out."

"Parade Of Youth."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: For a long time I have intended to express to you my very great appreciation of your Sunday magazine, "Parade of Youth," which I regard as a trail-blazer in its field. Those of us who are following our vision of an improved order of society in which men and women understand each other better and have learned to labor side by side harmoniously on the basis of equality, see in your brave venture the working out of that balancing process so necessary in the proper adjustment of human relationships: not so much emphasis on masculine achievement; more whole-hearted recognition of feminine accomplishments.

In beginning with the youth of the land, giving equal prominence to the admirable things both girls and boys are doing, you are breaking "the stubborn glebe" of custom and tradition which has always glorified the male and submerged the female of the species. In this invaluable contribution you are helping to lay the foundation of a broader, safer highway; one with greater freedom for all, therefore, less friction; one with fairer rules of the road, therefore more peaceful progress.

Thihk of the inspiration of thihs high endeavor! The men and women of the future will mount to still higher levels because of our labors. We, too, shall rise despite the stubborn opposition of an outmoded concept of life which seeks to prevent the fuller participation of women in all the formative policies and processes which determine the progress of nations.

Let nothing swerve you from your balanced, democratic policy of giving front page evidence that our girls are keeping pace with our boys—and that our young men and women are advancing together on that better road "Parade of Youth" is paving.

Advice On Traffic.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Neither through the medium of the local press, the local radio nor in frequent conversation with many "natives" have I heard or seen anything that amounted to more than passing comments as to "what is wrong with Washington traffic and what should be done about it."

First, there is the underprivileged but innocent pedestrian, practicing his broken-field running to edify and amaze the motorists. Violating traffic regulations? Yes. Then why not give every mother's son in this suicide club of jaywalkers a one-way ticket to Police Court?

Then there is that bundle of nerves, that twentieth century symbol of speed and progress, who hasn't time to go around the block, but has to make his hapless U-turn. This practice should be outlawed throughout the District.

Street cars ply a weary way in both directions, hauling 80,000 workers during the rush hours and twice and many and more of their beneficiaries in their propitious interludes. A street car has stopped in the middle of the block; a motorist in the right-hand lane is 17 inches from the track, and 18 inches clearance is necessary for passing. Three more have gone to the left of the "safety" zone for left turns. The street car misses two green lights before discharging its passengers and taking on more. Soon there is a parade of cars, scheduled to have several minutes time between each, for four blocks.

Are the motorists required to clear car tracks 18 inches and stay to the right of "safety" zones? It is rumored so. Then why aren't these regulations enforced? If not so, why aren't such regulations enacted and enforced?

The Traffic Bureau and the police unofficially aver that such a wholesale enforcement of traffic regulations is beyond the realm of possibility. The answer to this is that the fines accrued in two hours of same would be sufficient to triple the police force for the next year. Certainly the mess would be cleaned up by then.

The Post Impressionist

Regular Fellows.

Post Office, Friday.

I ALWAYS feel at home at the Army and Navy Club in Washington (remarked Casual Smith); and this is a strange thing, for I have never been even remotely connected with either branch of the service. Perhaps that is the reason. The members know so very much that I don't know, and those I have met have had the gentlemanly habit of assuming, gratifying though mistakenly, that I know as much as they do. This is a habit that comes only with maturity. You can't expect youngsters to have it.

I would not have you suppose that I am unduly modest. No, of course not. I never thought for a moment that you would fall into that error. But I never yet met a man who couldn't teach me something. My self-respect is saved by the knowledge that there is some one thing that I know better than the man to whom I am talking; some, one thing; some, another. If I am talking to a sailor I won't know about the sea, but I may know more about a garden; if I am talking to a truck farmer I won't know more about a garden, but I may know more about oysters or vaudeville, and so on indefinitely. But, believe it or not, when I am in the company of experts I don't want to talk; I want to listen; I want my talk to be merely a thread on which to string the other fellow's beads of information.

Not, of course, that in a crowd of experts off duty the beads are plentifully scattered round about. A club is not a school. At the Army and Navy Club, for instance, you are more likely to hear a discussion of baseball or football than one about ballistics. And that suits me, too. A man may get as tired of digging up facts as of digging up potatoes.

But when you are talking to Army and Navy men, the men who have trained and are training the fellows who will be our one defense in times of peril and stress, you are not talking only to soldiers and sailors, but to technicians. Back of the mind manufacturing small talk for your benefit may be new and original plans concerning naval and military strategy; something revolutionary in surgical operations; another installment of the serial of the projectile that will pierce any armor that is proof against any projectile; new engines, explosive or propulsive; and plans for the improvement of the commissary routine for armies in transit. You can't tell by just looking at a man what's eating his innards.

* * *

Take me, for instance. The reason I'm bumbling along in this way is that back of my mind is the matter of regimentation. I am opposed to regimentation, but I find myself making reservations. I abhor national regimentation but I admire the type of a man a certain kind of regimentation turns out. This does not apply to officers only. I have known enlisted men, many of them, and not one but was the better for the discipline he had known and the training he had received. So naturally I feel that this is a matter I should look into for my own peace of mind.

Regimentation in its economic sense is that system in which "the people are organized or regimented into bodies, and social functions are relegated to the several units." This is something repugnant to all free peoples.

But beyond peradventure regimentation (organization) on smaller scale is sometimes beneficial and in some few instances beneficial without qualifications.

Consider hats. A standard uniformity in hats—shape, color, material and price— would be a national calamity. (Hats would at least be as significant of a social trend as shirts.) But if I go to buy a hat size 7⅛ I want it to be the same size whether I buy it in Maine or California. If in order to get a hat to fit I have to get 6⅞ in Chicago and 7 in New Orleans, the lack of standardization (the regimentation of inanimate things) would be an infernal nuisance. Herbert Hoover when Secretary of Commerce sought, with only a fair amount of success, to bring about such standardization in other articles of general use. From which I deduce that anything that can't be improved by competition had better be standardized. But the world can't afford to have self-determination in pounds, pints and inches.

That's one angle. Here's another: Football is a highly competitive game. It is played by two organisms each composed of 11 perfectly co-ordinated parts. Business is a highly competitive game played by countless organisms composed of varying numbers of co-ordinating parts. Each co-ordinating part, a man, has to sink self to a certain extent while the game is in progress. But in a free country he doesn't have to play if he doesn't want to. He can seek another team or another game or loaf on the sidelines. The saving graces in both cases are the competitive spirit and freedom of choice.

From which I conclude that the same water that turns the mill may drown the miller; that some things are only good when they come in small packages, and that national regimentation is simply too much of a good thing. And I do not need to enumerate here and now the evils it would bring about.

And so, dear children (and here Casual Smith looked at the Old Timers in the Corner Store in a fatherly way), you had better run along and polish up your "alibis" and "I-told-you-sos," for one cannot tell at this moment which of them you will have use for on November 4.

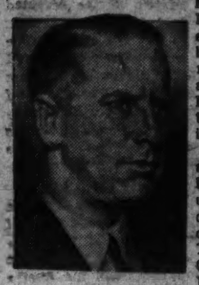
Fair Enough

By

Westbrook Pegler

Schenectady.

Sweeping the Republican opposition before them with the mighty logic of their debate, Jack Dempsey and his troup of wrestling statesmen continue their triumphant tour of upstate New York on behalf of Mr. Roosevelt and the New Deal. Mr. Dempsey referees the contests, kisses babies, delivers orations on red-blooded Americanism and autographs old envelopes in complete vindication of Mr. Roosevelt's policies.



Last night in the local armory the hypocrisy of the Republican platform and the unfitness of Alfred M. Landon were convincingly demonstrated in three matches. The first involved Tony Ciano, the former Fordham University halfback, and Count Ludwig Otto von Zuppe, of Germany, who wears a monocle. The next phase of the debate was presented by Maurice La Chapelle, of France, and Tiger Flowers Johnstone, of Cuba.

Dr. Henry Fields, of the University of Pennsylvania, and Mayes McLain, late of Iowa State University, also appealed to the intelligence of the citizens in robust exhibition, and the conclusion of the meeting was believed to have left Schenectady safe in the Democratic column.

• • • •

Mr. Eddie Eagan, late Olympic heavyweight boxing champion and the ballast on the American four-man bob team in the winter Olympics of 1932, has now joined the expedition and will deliver addresses at ten-mile intervals along the roads until the tour closes Friday night.

Mr. Eagan is now an Assistant United States Attorney in New York, but desires to say that he is at present on leave of absence without pay, collaborating with the wrestlers in the effort to save America.

His weight contributed much to the glory of the American colors in the four-man bob competition of 1932, and he weighs even more at this time, so his presence in the cast of Mr. Dempsey's caravan is no mean addition to the President's side of the case.

The forces of red-blooded, sporting manhood claimed an important victory in Binghamton the other evening. There, according to Mr. Jack Curley, the impresario of the tour, Mr. George F. Johnson, of the Endicott-Johnson Co., a great shoe magnate and proprietor of two entire towns, was completely won over to the New Deal after watching the wrestling bouts.

The orations of Mr. Roosevelt and his Cabinet and the arguments and editorials on the Republican side had not made up his mind, although he leaned rather dangerously to Mr. Landon. But after close attention to the wrestling contests and receiving one of Mr. Dempsey's souvenir balloons adorned with a picture of the President, Mr. Johnson capitulated.

• • • •

"The next day," Mr. Curley said, "he came out in his own newspaper with a full-page editorial in favor of Roosevelt. I have got it in my room. I will show it to you. Bessie, you show it to him."

Bessie is Mrs. Curley and probably the best feminine judge of political logic as expressed by wrestlers in the entire history of the world. Mrs. Curley has lived for years amid Mr. Curley's changing herds of wrestlers of all nations at his compound on Long Island.

Once she trained a wrestler to be her cook, and she says he cooked remarkably well, but was not satisfactory for formal dinners, owing to a somewhat uncouth manner. Once, at a formal dinner, Mrs. Curley's wrestler walked in from the kitchen in apron and undershirt and exclaimed to the guests, "If you don't think it is hot in that kitchen look at the sweat roll off me."

Mrs. Curley also delivers addresses on behalf of the New Deal, approaching such matters as foreign relations, the American home and agriculture from the women's angle, but Mr. Curley himself attends only to the feeding and transportation of the wrestlers.

The wrestlers travel in a separate unit, apart from Mr. Dempsey, Mr. Eagan and Mr. Charley Murphy, also an Assistant United States Attorney, who desires to say that he, too, is on leave of absence without pay. He and Mr. Eagan are anxious to get this point across to their fellow citizens, lest they be accused of playing politics on office time—which would be a foul canard and conduct unthinkable in the Democratic organization.

Mr. Dempsey does not know definitely from day to day which wrestler will appear in the debate, as frequent changes are made. One wrestler may be good on agriculture or States' rights and another a specialist in economic matters. So they come and they go according to the nature of the issue which it is desired to emphasize in a given locality, but it can be said without reservation that they have given the most intelligent presentation of the campaign problems yet afforded the citizens.

"I never really understood what this campaign was all about until I saw our boys up in that ring," said Mr. Ned Brown, the traffic manager of the expedition. "I listened to Mr. Roosevelt and Dr. Townsend and Col. Knox, and I was all confused. But everything is perfectly clear now. That Count von Zuppe with the monocle is a marvel on the tariff."

Your correspondent must sign off now and go watch Mr. Curley load the wrestlers into the truck for the jump to Glens Falls. It looks like a landslide here.

"White Banners"

By William Lyon Phelps

Lloyd C. Douglas.

The Rev. Lloyd C. Douglas, who captured the affections of several thousand readers by his first novel, "Magnificent Obsession," moves on from triumph to triumph, and has abundantly proved that his initial success was not a fluke.

If clergymen and priests and physicians become novelists, they have at the start one tremendous advantage; they have a prodigious amount of human material. A city pastor or a country physician has an intimate knowledge of men and women, vastly superior to that within the reach of those who have only literary ambition. The minister's easiest day is Sunday; the rest of the week is taken up with the most perplexing problems in the intricate affairs and in the often abnormal psychology of humanity. It has always been so. A very charitable priest once said: "I don't know what the heart of a bad man is like; but I know what the heart of a good man is like; and believe me, it is something terrible!"

• • • •

Lloyd Douglas, blessed with natural ability, an easy flow of language, an engaging personality, and an ever-present sense of humor, is an Indiana man, who has held active pastorates in the cities of Washington, Ann Arbor, Akron, Los Angeles, and Montreal. After publishing a number of books on religion, he wrote a novel, "Magnificent Obsession." I am informed that he took this to various prominent publishers, who declined it. It was finally published in Chicago, and sold several hundred thousand copies.

He then wisely resigned his pastorate, for he had an enormously large audience that he could reach through print. He wrote "Forgive Us Our Trespasses" and "Precious Jeopardy," which were not so good as "Magnificent Obsession." Then he wrote a novel which was much better than "Magnificent Obsession," called "Green Light"—a very good book indeed.

French Devaluation

Paris Correspondent Sees Rise In Living Costs As Principal Obstacle In Blum's Economic Recovery Program.

By Andre Vullict.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Paris.

"TO THINK of a monetary devaluation without at the same time considering a real industrial and economic revolution would be tantamount to imposing upon our working class a dreadful ordeal."

Such was Leon Blum's idea about devaluation in November, 1935, when he was only a deputy and the head of the French Socialist Party. And again, not long ago, speaking for devaluation before the Senate, in his capacity of French Premier, he said: "If the Blum experiment must have any meaning at all, it is to try out in what measure, up to what extent, it is possible to achieve a certain amount of social progress and human equality within the framework of our legal institutions." And reaffirming his socialistic convictions, the French Premier declared at a public meeting a few days ago that his experiment was "the experiment of the whole working class."

It thus appears that Premier Blum's mind is naturally bent toward social reforms, is normally partial to manual workers and the working class. However, his government is constantly battered by the attacks of a growing opposition which thinks that the devaluation of the French currency must be the starting point of a new policy, one that demands the balancing of the budget, and the restoration of public credit and international trade.

Moreover, so long as the French ideal will be that of a free, democratic, capitalistic country—and the signs are that it will be for a long time—the French government will have to take into consideration a certain number of economic factors which exist. It is self-evident that if the purchasing power of the masses is to be kept at its present level, and if French devaluation is to be a success, the cost of living must be kept down.

The present French government is as eager as any to bring about economic recovery in this country. It has agreed to devaluation. If that proves a success, it will get the credit for it. If it is a failure, it will be held responsible for having devalued the franc a second time and it may become the most unpopular government France has had in years.

Devaluation Ordered At Inauspicious Time.

WITH THIS in mind, it will be easier to understand the atmosphere in which the French monetary experiment is taking place and to make a brief survey of its favorable and unfavorable factors.

Most important among the unfavorable elements is the fact that the franc has been devalued after a four-month "reflationary" period, at a time when prices and production costs are quite unstable and most decidedly on the rise, trying to adapt themselves to new conditions.

On the one hand, agricultural prices have been steadily going up in France for the past year, with wheat soaring as much as 100 per cent over its last fall quotations.

On the other hand, the so-called "social" laws voted last June by the new French Parliament have imposed upon French business the additional burden of increased wages, paid holidays for workers, collective bargaining and the 40-hour work week.

As a result of these two factors the cost of living, as shown by the French official index numbers, is about 20 per cent higher than a year ago. If French traders and producers regard the devaluation of the franc as just one more incentive to raise their prices, it may be feared that French prices, expressed in dollars or pounds sterling, will be comparatively as high as they were before the devaluation, thus depriving tourists and French exporters of any benefit. And in the meantime the purchasing power of the French masses—or their standard of living—will be lowered substantially, with possible far-reaching consequences.

Government Straining To Hold Prices Down.

OF COURSE the French government has stated it would do everything in its power to devise and carry out a strict policy to check any substantial rise in prices. But this is a difficult task, not only because there are some good reasons for a reasonable rise (see above), but because of the French temperament.

Whereas most Anglo-Saxons regard devaluation as a sort of financial advantage gained over other countries, the French are apt to take a monetary adjustment as a partial bankruptcy. As Mr. A. L. Jeune, a French economist, recently put it in "Paris-Midi," the Anglo-Saxons think of devaluation in terms of international trade and in the light of present facts. To them a dollar is a dollar, a pound is a pound, and they can see them conquering new foreign markets.

The French look at devaluation historically, so to speak, and see their currency in the light of what it has been in the past, before the World War, then under Poincare, now under Blum. To them a franc is just so much gold and as that amount of gold dwindles, they automatically make the adjustment in their minds. "When I receive a hundred-franc note," they think, "I only get 67 reals francs." So, to make a "real" profit, they raise their prices.

This may show an utter lack of international business sense, but it is a cold fact and it is considered the most difficult obstacle the French government is up against for the eventual success of its monetary policy.

Tariff Counts Little As Check On Living Costs.

AMONG the other elements which may be regarded as adverse factors in the French monetary situation are the following:

The tariff policy through which the French government is planning to counteract the rise in domestic prices by a lowering of duties on foreign products is limited in scope. In fact, in many cases, especially when it comes to agricultural products, the population is opposed to such a policy.

The officially-expressed hope that, as devaluation is now an accomplished fact, the French capital abroad ought to be repatriated very quickly is not materializing to any substantial extent. So long as the French currency may be further devalued, it may be feared that a large portion of that capital will still remain abroad.

Then there also is the fact that, for various expenditures, the French treasury's needs during 1937 will be around 25,000,000,000 francs (roughly $1,250,000,000). This is a large amount of money for France, and it will be possible to raise it only through public borrowing. In the opinion of many economists, this may prevent a return to cheaper money rates, which is what French business badly needs. In the long run it may retard the recovery which should normally follow devaluation.

Government Control Of Commodities Helps.

HOWEVER, the French economic situation also reveals certain favorable factors.

First of all, in the question of prices, it should be noticed that a very large number of commodities or services, whose prices the government controls very closely, may rise quite slowly, if at all. Examples are rents, public utilities, transportation, wheat, bread and the like.

Moreover, in an effort to counteract any undue rise in the living cost, following devaluation, the French government has embarked upon a drastic policy of reduction in French customs duties. For instance, under the heading of foods, tea and coffee benefit by a reduction of 46 per cent and 26 per cent respectively. Among industrial products 58 per cent of the former duty has been taken off gas and oil and more than 100 quotas have been removed. It is understood this is only the beginning of a commercial policy directed toward sponsoring a more active international trade. Should the French devaluation help bring about—if only in a small measure—a revival of international exchanges, it might already be regarded as successful enough.

In this, the success of the French devaluation may be greatly helped by the fact that prosperity is gradually coming back throughout the world and, to all probability, France will pick up also.

It goes without saying that French recovery will be possible only if the French government can preserve this country from any sort of social disorder. The indications are that Premier Blum, his cabinet members and the French people at large are well determined to do so. The communistic danger, if ever there was any, is fading. The great majority of French public opinion is fed up with strikes and mass manifestations.

Radio Politics

An Editorial Review

Vandenberg Cut Off.

REPUBLICAN COMMENT on the action of the Columbia Broadcasting System in cutting Senator Vandenberg off the air when he undertook to debate with phonographic recordings of President Roosevelt's statements was typified by the New York Herald Tribune which said, in part:

The lot of a radio company living by grace of a politically minded commission, obedient to the President's whim, is not exactly a happy one. But who can relish the idea of a medium of public information thus restrained in the crisis of a campaign? The novel use of a candidate's own vocal records obviously deserves cateful consideration. It would seem at first blush as if here were unmistakably the one true and just method of quoting an opponent. By letting him speak his sentences in his own voice every possibility of false stress or misinterpretation would seem to be eliminated. A radio corporation ought, it would seem, to be the first to recognize the justice of this view • • • The Columbia system has a Presidential commission to be afraid of. But when has a candidate for the Presidency been afraid of the sound of his own voice?

There is no doubt about the campaign having reached its silly stage. Senator Vandenberg's radio stunt is one of the most novel performances so far put on by either side. It was highly original and interest in it was enhanced by the cooperation of the Columbia Broadcasting Co. in cutting the act in two and mixing a lot of silence with the voice of Senator Vandenberg and his phonograph record. We believe that originality should be encouraged, especially among Senators, and hope the phonograph debate can be heard in its entirety. There are many possibilities in such debates. While Senator Vandenberg merely used the old records of the President's voice, there is no good reason why the Democrats should not immediately stage a debate between two sets of records, one made when Gov. Landon was speaking in favor of the New Deal and the other giving the latest views of the Republican candidate.

• • • •

A Midwestern estimate of the incident appeared in the Memphis Commercial-Appeal which said:

Already at the top of the political game, radio is still a raw youth. It is gawky. Perhaps Emily Post should give it a few lessons. The row over the use of phonograph records of President Roosevelt's voice last Saturday night by Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg of Michigan illustrates the immaturity of radio in politics • • • The existence of the six months' limit on station licenses always gives color to a charge of suppression of free speech when a broadcast is interrupted or a speaker is taken off the air.

On the other hand the smart aleck, if not slicker, tactics of the Republican National Committee in putting Vandenberg on the air will make many think that whatever happened was coming to the Republicans. The broadcast was not truthfully announced. No mention was made in the public billing that the Senator was to carry on a debate with some of Mr. Roosevelt's 4-year-old canned speeches.

• • • •

The debate seems to center around the Columbia Broadcasting System's rule against use of phonograph records on chain broadcasts. Such a rule has a useful purpose in protecting artists against repeated use of their work without pay. To admit no exceptions to it, however, is ridiculous. Chancellor Schuschnigg of Austria yesterday used a record of a speech by the late Chancellor Dollfuss, in connection with a radio address of his own. Under the broadcasting company's rules, such an effective oratorical device would be barred in this country. Presumably, also, a patriotic broadcast could not include a record of Lincoln's Gettysburg address, were such a record available. Columbia disclaims any intent to interfere with free speech, and plainly must be acquitted of any such charge, since the same rule applies to all political parties. But it would be wise to modify its iron-clad rule against electrical transcriptions, so that this valuable method of recalling a speaker's past words may not be outlawed.

Tutor and guide and friend throughout the years—
That, coming through the voice and spirit, pierced
The darkness of a deep, unending night.

For fifty years the mirror of a world
Invisible to sightless, yearning eyes,
You helped a gallant woman through the mists
To sit among the noble and the wise.

You found her as a helpless, groping child,
A babe who could not speak, or see or hear,
Where every obstacle would disappear.

The bleak and dark imprisonment you broke,
An Easter morn to one with senses dead;
That was the perfect tribute, you recall . . .
"My Easter morning" . . . that is what she said.

You let the light in, shattering the fog,
And helped a personality to flower;
You freed a spirit dauntless as was yours . . .

Her life a symbol of unconquered will,
But your devotion paved the weary way

The pall of blindness as a child you'd known,
And when one day the light came flashing through,
You gloried in the priceless gifts of God
And served as only gallant women do.

To Helen Keller, deaf and dumb and blind,
You came as might an angel in the night;
Communion of two dauntless souls took place,

Long, trying days to make this little child
Perceive and sense and feel and comprehend . . .
The years so full of dark discouragement . . .
And then the child's first words, "My teacher!
. . . Friend!"

The years at Radcliffe and the honors high,
The pupil and the graduation day . . .
The world's acclaim of such a struggle won,
Then kneeling there together just to pray.

The honors and the praise of far-flung lands—
Two lives so interwoven that the world
Stood conscious of its selfish, petty ways.

• • • •

Heroic woman, in the final days
To know again the sudden fading scene—
Yet face it with the courage and the smile
That marked the bruised and bleeding Nazarene.

"But you will smile and walk with me again" . . .
Thus whispers Helen Keller. So 'twill be:
With eyes wide open, lips and ears made quick,
You both shall walk through all eternity.

A Modern Miracle

Catholic Scholar Considers Origins Of Father Coughlin, Whose Radio Voice Is Present-Day Phenomenon.

The Post presents the first of three articles on the Rev. Charles E. Coughlin written from a Roman Catholic viewpoint. The author is a former research fellow of The Catholic University of America and now professor of sociology at St. Thomas College, St. Paul, Minn. He is also a correspondent of the Catholic Daily Tribune of Dubuque, Iowa.

By Clarence J. Enzler, Ph. D.

FOR SIX YEARS America has witnessed a modern miracle. Since the autumn of 1930, a Catholic priest has commanded the national ear. Sunday after Sunday, beginning in the autumn of one year and continuing until late spring of the next, ceasing his broadcasts only during the summer months, Father Charles E. Coughlin has spilled millions of fervid, tempestuous, persuasive and dictatorial words onto the ether waves of the Nation.

He has been praised. He has been censored. Nobody seems to be dispassionate about Father Coughlin. He is either a Fascist or a fairy prince. He is either a Messiah or a menace. He is either a fool or the most far-sighted man in Christendom. No one has even made the combination and called him the most far-sighted fool in the world, which, though not true, is nevertheless closer to actual fact than any of the single terms mentioned.

Forebears Described As Irish Catholic Workers.

FATHER Charles E. Coughlin is by ancestry of Irish, worker, Catholic stock. Patrick Coughlin, his great-grandfather, was a heavy-brogued Irish immigrant, who shoveled and pick-axed his part of the big ditch which later became the Erie Canal. Daniel Coughlin, grandfather, who lived most of his life in Buffalo, was a carpenter. Thomas Coughlin, Indiana-born father of today's "radio priest," stoked Great Lakes steamers, became sexton of the cathedral in Hamilton, Ontario, and later managed a bakery.

The same strains—Irish, worker, Catholic—dominated the maternal side of the family tree. Jeremiah Mahoney was another sturdy son of the Emerald Isle. His daughter, Amelia, a devout, wholesome, countrybred maiden, became Mrs. Thomas Coughlin and the mother of Charles.

It was on October 25, 1891—168 days after Pope Leo XIII published his immortal "Rerum Novarum" that the infant Charles Coughlin was born in Hamilton. Since his father was American, the boy was entitled to American citizenship. Apparently, nothing especially noteworthy presaged the youngster's future influence. Football, baseball, little escapades, dreary hours at the piano-bench—his was the childhood of a million other boys. Elementary education at St. Mary's parochial school under the guidance of the gentle nuns. Daily mass at the Cathedral. Then, in 1903, entrance into St. Michael's of Toronto, and four years later into Toronto University.

As fullback of the football team, Charlie Coughlin played through an entire game with a fractured jaw. His activities were mental as well as physical. Special talents for English and debating cropped out. And in 1911, young Coughlin, not yet 20, took his college degrees with honors in philosophy.

The three months after graduation he spent in Europe, puzzling over the problems of vocation and avocation. The tug of talent was pulling him in three directions—toward religion, sociology and politics. On his return from Europe he met his favorite teacher. They talked. And that fall he entered the Basilian novitiate to prepare himself for the priesthood. Failing health sent him to Waco, Tex., for one year. Then June 29, 1916, Charles Coughlin, not quite 25 years old, was ordained priest.

First Assignment Was In Ontario.

THE FOLLOWING years found him teaching English, philosophy and some high school subjects in Assumption College of Sandwich, Ontario, which lies just across the international boundary from Detroit. More important is the fact that eventually he began to cross over to Detroit to deliver sermons at St. Agnes Church. The sermons attracted local attention. Always thoroughly prepared, they presented old truths with unwonted vigor.

Father Coughlin belonged to the Basilian Sodality of priests. But the Basilians were disbanded under a new code of canon law. As a result, Father Coughlin applied for admission to the Detroit diocese and was accepted February 26, 1923.

Three months as curate of St. Augustine's Church in Kalamazoo, Mich.; 18 months at St. Leo's, Detroit; in 1925, pastor at North Branch, Mich., and then in May, 1926, came the order to build up a new parish of the 32 Catholic families at Royal Oak, Mich., a hotbed of the Ku Klux Klan activities.

Great men by little decisions are made. On August 15, evening devotions at Royal Oak were attended by less than 20 devout parishioners. Apparently, bringing local Catholics to devotions was much like getting the mountain to come to Mohamet. Consequently, since the world would not come to him, Father Coughlin decided to go to the world, and on that night he announced his intention to broadcast services in a two-fold attempt to build up the parish and bring Catholicity to many souls.

Detroit's WJR liked the priest and his idea. After all, Detroit was over 50 per cent Catholic. The broadcasts began. In 1929 stations in Chicago and Cincinnati were added, bringing the total outlets to three. Then, in 1930 and 1931, the Columbia System carried the programs until the fiery orator's attack on financial interests brought protests. Finally in 1931, Father Coughlin established his own chain of stations, through which today he can reach an audience variously estimated at between 30,000,000 and 60,000,000 persons. The radio time and telephone expenses incident to this arrangement are met out of voluntary contributions.

HUNDREDS of thousands of dollars have passed through the priest's hands. Each weekly broadcast is said to cost approximately $11,000. His church, with its Shrine of the Little Flower and beautiful Crucifixion Tower, approximate $750,000 for expenses of construction. Small wonder that many have queried with some dubiousness, "Is Father Coughlin honest? Has he lined his own pockets?" Somebody even started false charges which led to a G-Man investigation; but when the Government's agent finished, the $8 income tax which the priest had paid was refunded.

Again, much has been made of alleged Coughlin silver investments. But the worst that can be said is that the investments were foolish for a person in Father Coughlin's position, not dishonest. In a word, money has not tainted him. He lives quite simply.

Many characteristics stamp the Coughlin sermons as peculiarly his own. He is a princely phrase-maker, a coiner of verbal gems. He speaks of the "olive-sandled Pyrenees," of thoughts "lighting their candles in the mind of Jesus Christ." Unfortunately, like many other persons blessed with special talents of speech and pen, Father Coughlin frequently allows emotional force to carry him into gross exaggerations and slovenly thought. Repetition of punch-phrases, such as "drive the money changers from the temple," "international bankers," "lords of industry," is an outstanding Coughlinistic. He drills these into the minds of his listeners until they become well established pegs upon which hang a mare or less complete wardrobe of economic theories.

THE UNPRECEDENTED leap to Nation-wide popularity and leadership of this Catholic clergyman may be illustrated by the numbers of references to him in various years in the New York Times Index. In 1930 there was not one reference to Father Coughlin in the Index. In 1931 three items appeared beneath his name. In 1932 the total rose to 10; in 1933 to 32; in 1934 to 48, and last year to approximately 200.

His files contain an amazing mass of letters from American "common people" which, he says, enable him to tell with great accuracy the state of public opinion. For two years his letters have averaged 80,000 a week.

What is the secret? Someone has remarked that Father Coughlin mixes resentment and religion in a strange but potent broth. It is a cogent observation. He has capitalized on discontent, on the obvious evil of mal-distributed wealth and income. He has vested the issue in religious garb. But over and above these, he has realized and utilized radio much as Henry Ford realized and utilized the demand for a cheap good car. Besides, Father Coughlin is a tremendously powerful orator and an extraordinary organizer. His speeches are not smooth. They will never be renowned for clear, logical thought. They are too fervent for the silvery effect. But they do possess an unexampled, rugged, emotional appeal.

Traffic Group Asks Uniform Safety Zones

Board of Trade Unit Urges 'Fool-Proof' Platforms, Adequate Markers.

Uniform and "fool-proof" safety zones were advocated for Washington yesterday by the Board of Trade traffic committee at a luncheon meeting in the Harrington Hotel.

Striking at the present type of unguarded street car loading platforms and button-lined safety zones, the committee adopted a resolution urging adoption of uniform zones with uniform warning markers.

After a lengthy investigation of the city's safety zone problem, Maj. S. D. Ashford, chairman of a subcommittee appointed to map recommendations, told the traffic meeting that District needs were hampered by lack of funds. He suggested immediate action in seeking a Congressional appropriation, at the same time recommending that installation and upkeep of safety zones be placed directly under Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer.

At present, it was pointed out, the zones are established by the Public Utilities Commission at a large expense to the Capital Transit Co.

The new "stream-lined" type of zone, similar to the ones on F street northwest, between Seventh and Ninth streets, was proposed for uniform use throughout the city. These zones, it was explained, should be adequately marked and lighted at night. A system of flood light, enabling motorists to observe persons standing in the zones after dark, was also suggested.

Gen. Amos A. Fries, U. S. A., retired, flayed the button-type of safety zone used along Wisconsin avenue, explaining to the committee they presented a hazard to highway safety. The white and yellow lines surrounding the zones, he said, were "practically useless" during winter months when snow was on the ground.

Following the safety-zone discussion, John A. Bresnahan, chairman of the sub-committee on law enforcement, urged the committee to recommend additional traffic policemen. The present force of 54 motorcycle officers has not been increased since 1930, he said.

"We can't expect adequate law enforcement unless we have an adequate force to enforce laws," Bresnahan declared.

Following his report, the committee voted to recommend that Maj. Ernest W. Brown, police superintendent, appoint 25 new policemen from the Police Training School to traffic duty.

Mickey Mouse Scores In Virginia Tech Poll

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Blacksburg, Oct. 22.—Franklin D. Roosevelt obtained 637 votes out of a total of 950 straw votes taken by The Virginia Tech, weekly newspaper published by the students here. Gov. Landon received 285 with the remainder being scattered among a field most of whom will not be voted for by the general electorate.

Col. C. H. Tenney, commandant of cadets at Virginia Tech, nosed out Norman Thomas by getting 11 votes to the Socialist candidate's 9. Congressman Lemke and Al Smith got 4 votes each; Mickey Mouse and Possum got 3 each; and 1 went to three members of the staff. Betty Boop, Mussolini, and Peter Rabbit also got a vote apiece. One conscientious cadet wrote across his ballot "ineligible—under age."

Securities Act Is Challenged By 3 Suspects

Men Indicted in Stock Case Assert Law Violates Constitution.

Validity of the securities act of 1933 was attacked in District Court yesterday when attorneys representing three men charged with violating the criminal provisions of the act asserted it was unconstitutional.

The three men, Dan F. Reynolds, Harry E. Hanes and Milton Janis, declared through their attorney, William E. Leahy, that the act attempted to "regulate persons rather than things" and that is encroached on the sovereign domain of the in direct violation of the Constitution.

The three are charged with conspiring to misrepresent facts submitted to the Securities and Exchange Commission in a statement registering the stock of the Continental Distillers & Importers Corporation. Some $40,000 of stock of the company allegedly was sold, though the company never was in operation.

The false statement, David A. Pine, assistant United States attorney said were made in connection with the value and description of the company's property at Shrewsbury, Pa.

In refuting the attack on the indictment, Pine asserted the securities act does not make compulsory the filing of registration statements, but does require that when filed they must be accurate.

John J. Sirica, an associate attorney, also attacked the indictment against Janis, Hanes and Reynolds on the grounds the indictment was so vague it did not conform to the rule that a defendant must be acquainted with the charges against him.

On the Air Today

Unless you belong to that extraordinary stratum of extreme placidity—the type who simply says, "Naw, I didn't see it"—you'll not miss "The Big Broadcast of 1937" which goes on view at the Palace today. The realm of the cinema belongs to Nelson Bell but I feel safe in recommending this all-star flicker which draws almost entirely from the ranks of radio broadcasting for its talent.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Bell was in the adjoining seat for the screening Wednesday afternoon and I distinctly heard him laugh—with abandon—at various times. It is worthy of mention in case you, too, may have had an impression that a dramatic critic sits on his hands and sneers throughout all previews.

The current "Big Broadcast" presents Jack Benny, Burns and Allen, Bob Burns, Benny Goodman and his "swing" band, Leopold Stokowski and the symphony orchestra, Martha Raye, Shirley Ross, Benny Fields, Frank Forest and many others.

As interesting an angle as any other, from a radio point of view, is the subtle crack taken at the use of phonograph records on the air. Fred Waring, who recently sued to prevent his records being played in Philadelphia, probably will see the picture twice.

You can go prepared to laugh. And it's every man for himself if the house is crowded. It's another of those pictures with the laughs coming fast.

The Educational Radio Project of the Department of the Interior is certain to exist through June, 1937. Another grant of $113,000 has been allocated by President Roosevelt for continuance of the project's program.

Five programs are now being aired over national networks under the production of project officials. About 6,000 letters are being received weekly from listeners, according to information from Commissioner of Education J. W. Studebaker's office.

To quote the commissioner: "With funds for continuation of the radio project, the Office of Education is not only discovering successful methods by which education can take the airways, but it is also discovering methods of organizing and financing educational broadcasting which agencies of education can follow.

"There is not the slighest doubt in my mind that radio will become one of the most powerful constructive forces for the education of our people if we devote adequate attention to the development of truly educational programs."

The project's programs now on the air are "The World Is Ours," "Have You Heard," "Answer Me This" and the veteran "Education in the News," over N. B. C. facilities, and "Safety Musketeers," over Columbia networks.

About the Showshops

WASHINGTON theatergoers have not seen the last of Mr. Van Heflin, whose photographic image should be appearing somewhere around here.

If you are one who attended the National Theater during last week's engagement of Ina Claire in "End of Summer," you know who Mr. Heflin is. If you did not afford yourself the pleasure of enjoying that sprightly comedy, there seems slight point in saying that Mr. Heflin was the articulate and amusing young radical in the play, who went by the name of Dennis McCarthy—and did a particularly fine job of his part.

BELL.

Ordinarily, when an actor has made one appearance at the National that is the last you see of him until another season rolls around—if that is the way seasons get here. But in the case of Mr. Heflin you will see him very soon again as second male lead with Katharine Hepburn in "A Woman Rebels." On the screen, that one is.

When he was here last week Van confided that he was selected for the role of Gerald in "A Woman Rebels"—this is the item formerly known by the working title of "Portrait of a Rebel"—by Miss Hepburn herself, after she had seen his performance in "End of Summer."

It was on the closing night of last year's run of "End of Summer" that Heflin received a wire to take a plane that night and report to Hollywood where a car would meet him at the airport. He did, the car met him and, much to his chagrin, he found that he didn't know what studio had called him. He thought it was Paramount, but when his chauffeur drove right past that plant he decided that maybe he was wrong.

He confesses that he almost died trying to master the change in technique between stage and screen acting. However, he must have done fairly well because RKO-Radio did its best to induce him to remain on the lot—a contingency he had not anticipated and could not accommodate because of a contract to resume in "End of Summer" this season for the road tour.

It is an interesting coincidence that Doris Dudley, who played the young girl in "End of Summer" in New York last year—Susan Fox played it here—appears as Heflin's daughter in "A Woman Rebels." He can do youth or old age with equal effectiveness.

If you care for biographical information concerning this gifted young fellow, he was born in Walters, Okla. While still a kid, his parents moved to Long Beach, Calif., where he was graduated from Polytechnic High School.

He worked his way back to New York as an able-bodied seaman and went on the stage in 1928. His first role was in "Mr. Money Penny," which was directed by Richard Boleslawski, then devoting his talents to the Broadway theater.

The day after the play closed, he returned to his native Oklahoma, where he completed his university schooling, later taking a degree at Yale. After graduation he came East again and joined the famous Hedgerow Theater in Rose Valley, Penn. From there he went to Dennis, Mass., and acted for a time with the Cape Playhouse Company. Returning to New York, he understudied the lead in "Sailor, Beware" and then appeared in "Races," a Theater Guild flop. After Bar Harbor, Me., and a great deal of radio work, the "End of Summer" engagement bobbed up, which brings us practically down to date.

On the RKO-Radio lot, Heflin's dressing room was next door to Fred Astaire's, which he thinks was a dandy idea. When "End of Summer" closes its tour in January, you will probably find him out there again.

So now you know.

They are doing that same staggered-hours business all over again today at the Rialto. By reason of the fact that the official Democratic and Republican Presidential campaign films are to be run off tonight in honor of the National Press Club, the house will be closed for 25 minutes, from 7:35 to 8, to insure the comfortable seating of the members of the club. The specific schedule of presentations of the campaign films and "Six of a Kind," the regular screen feature for the week, will be found elsewhere on this or the next page in the "Film Time Tables."

Another musical novelty has been prepared for this week at Loew's Capitol by the fork-handed maestro, Phil Lampkin. Mr. Lampkin and his associates have been diligently at work these past several days perfecting a new arrangement of "Did You Mean It?" a fox-trot hit of several years ago. They tell me, now, that it emerges as a miniature symphonic work of some distinction.

The piece, it seems, has been translated into the musical idiom of the old masters. Phil is wondering what Mr. John Q. Public will think about it. Judging from past observations, Mr. John Q. Public probably will eat it up!

Katharine Cornell will arrive in New York City today aboard the S. S. Bremen, after a brief holiday spent in southern France and the Tyrol, to begin rehearsals of Maxwell Anderson's new drama of "The Wingless Victory." This will be the first of three new Anderson dramas to be produced this season and will have its first performance on any stage in the National Theater in this city on Tuesday night, November 24.

There comes to hand—on the postman's second ring—a letter which I am especially pleased to receive. It says, in part: "Dear Mr. Bell: I must tell you how awfully glad I am that you liked 'First Lady.' What Washington thought of her is more important to me than any other experience she's likely to have, and I can't tell you what a real delight your more than generous review gives me."

There are other extraneous comments of a more or less confidential nature which would have no place in the public prints, but it is pleasant to know that the writer is as pleased with Washington's reception of her play as Washington was with her lively commentary on life in the Capital.

The letter is signed by Katharine Dayton, author of "First Lady," in collaboration with George S. Kaufman—the play not the letter.

Why-Buttons-Pop-Off-Vests Note.

Personal nomination for the smartest crack of the new week on the screen: Jack Benny and Ray Milland in "The Big Broadcast of 1937."

Benny: If I had any brains, I'd blow you to a gun.

Not funny? It must be the way I tell it.

Is Importantly Cast With Katie

Feudin' Is Hot In Hollywood's Hazy Foothills

The Ladies of the Cinema, It Seems, Are Having Their Imbroglios.

By the United Press.

Hollywood, Oct. 22. — Reports Anne Shirley and Margo were "feudin'" in the mountains—or at least in the Hollywood foothills—are stilled by a night-club truce.

Nascent warfare bobbed up when Margo, single-named converted dancer from Mexico City, came on the RKO lot to do "Winterset." Shirley avoided introductions and whenever she met Margo on studio streets, turned on an Arctic freeze.

Reason was the 18-year-old redhead had set her heart on playing the "Winterset" feminine lead, but RKO moguls gave her the inverted thumb because she was "too young" and borrowed the Mex, who had played the part on Broadway.

Thereafter galleries gathered quickly whenever a chance Margo-Shirley meeting seemed likely, and betting was not on whether fur would fly but how soon.

The picture wound into the box without casualties, however, and the payoff came when Margo was placed next to Shirley in a Beverly Hills bright spot. After an hour's silent sitting Shirley broke down, introduced herself, and confessed she had avoided Margo fearing she couldn't face her without "disgracing myself with tears" over losing the part.

Latest role drop-kicked by blonde Carole Lombard in her new temperamental act has landed squarely in the lap of Jean Arthur.

The development in itself seems likely to unhinge the Lombard nose, but to make the issue more pointed, the up-and-coming Miss Arthur is teamed with Fred MacMurray, $650-a-week Paramount star and perennial stooge for the expensive Lombard.

Picture is "Exclusive Story," a tale of newspaper circulation warfare by John Moffitt, former Kansas City Star item hound, and Lombard reportedly gave it the thumb in a peeve because the studio failed to get Spencer Tracy to play opposite her.

Arthur, who has knocked around in pictures several years with indifferent success, became a ball of fire after "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town," and her work as "Calamity Jane" in Cecil B. DeMille's sage-brusher, "The Plainsman," added to the heat.

Campaign Film Causes a Mighty Din at Rialto

By Nelson B. Bell.

"SIX OF A KIND." Paramount picturization of a story by Keene Thompson and Douglas MacLean, adapted to the screen by Walter DeLeon and Harry Ruskin, featuring Charles Ruggles and Mary Boland, Alison Skipworth and W. C. Fields and George Burns and Gracie Allen, with Grace Bradley, Bradley Page, Walter Long, Lew Kelly, George Pearce, Kathleen Burke, the late Tammany Young and Verna D. Hillie. Directed by Leo McCarey. A revival.

Pandemonium held full sway in the Rialto Theater last night.

The exhibition of the official Republican and Democratic motion pictures of the candidates of the two major parties in the Presidential race and their activities in the campaign was construed by a majority of the large house in attendance as a signal for letting go with every vocal disturbance they could muster, whistling, booing, hissing, stamping the feet and what not.

Surprisingly enough, partisanship seemed about equally divided between the two camps. Gov. Landon was loudly cheered and also loudly booed. President Roosevelt was loudly cheered and also loudly booed. The ballot box set up in the Temple of Apollo lobby of the theater will have to tell the final story of Washington's preference in the race, insofar as that can be determined from a theater's straw vote.

Balloting was lively last evening, with both Republican and Democratic booths supplying campaign literature, buttons, pasters, miniature metal images of the party symbols—elephant and donkey—and the like, to all who wished them.

Films Are Comprehensive.

The pictures themselves comprise a fairly comprehensive survey of what has been read in the newspapers and heard through the loudspeakers since the campaign really got hot. Each side sets forth its most powerful arguments in its own behalf and against the opposition. There is, to be sure, some logic on both sides and the battle on the screen is not half so violent as the booing contest out in the audience.

Landon's half of the show is devoted almost entirely to arguments against the soundness of the New Deal and the revolutionary governmental policies it has introduced since March 4, 1933. The Democratic portion of the screen joust, on the other hand, devotes itself in large measure to a pictorial biography of Franklin Delano Roosevelt, from his birth at Hyde Park in 1882 to the present, including his service as Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Vice Presidential candidate with Gov. Cox, Governor of New York and President.

It was a smart piece of showmanship that brought these official committee films to the screen of a theater, where they may be dispassionately appraised by the public—provided the public is able to think clearly through the din it makes while the pictures are being projected.

Partisanship's Comedy Antidote.

The regular screen feature for the week is "Six of a Kind," Paramount's nonsensical comedy that was originally released in January, 1934.

This is the celluloid recital of the misadventures that befell J. Pinkham Whinney and his wife, Flora, on a transcontinental motor trip to California in an attempt to recapture the romance of their original honeymoon at Niagara Falls. It is in celebration of their twentieth wedding anniversary. What happens to them along the way is plenty. Every incident of the trip is in the nature of a minor catastrophe.

The McWhinneys are played by Charles Ruggles and Mary Boland. Those contributing most to their discomfiture include W. C. Fields, Alison Skipworth, George Burns and Gracie Allen, and the others listed in the small-type paragraph preceding these comments.

Owing to the combined length of "Six of a Kind" and the political films, there is no room on the program for supplementary attractions. None, as a matter of fact, is needed.

Tonight at 8, the National Press Club membership will attend the Rialto to view the campaign films.

Blast Kills 21 Workers.

Rouen, France, Oct. 22 (AP).—Twenty-one workmen were killed and four injured tonight in a quarry explosion at Cauvicourt. A dynamite charge exploded prematurely.

Comes to Fore in 'Broadcast'

The Post's New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons.

Manhattan Cocktail.

FAME: Some years ago Harry Rosenthal, the bandleader, rented a suite of rooms at the Warwick Hotel, and spent $40,000 in decorating it . . . His especial pride were the panels upon which are inscribed the autographs he collected during those years—autographs of the most prominent personages, including socialites and theatrical figures. Rosenthal is leaving for the Coast soon, and his suite was rented as an office by George White, the producer . . . White is mindful of the sanctity of those autographs and has permitted them to remain undisturbed. He has made one change, however. Around those autograph-panels he has had constructed a beautiful, brand new—washroom.

TURMOIL: Polly Moran at last is confessing the reason behind the family disturbance recently, which necessitated the summoning of police in response to her calls for help . . . Polly's husband objected to the fact that he was being called "Mr. Polly Moran"—and started raising hell. When the police arrived they rushed up the steps, through the door—to be greeted by the comedienne's husband . . . "Are you," they asked, breathlessly, "Mr. Polly Moran?"

CHATTER: The French Casino's deal for Abe Lyman's Band wasn't negotiated, because the cafe wouldn't pay more than ordinary union scale . . . The Digest poll shows Landon leading 10 to 7 in Pennsylvania. Robert Greene & Co. last night offered $10,000 even money on Roosevelt's taking the State . . . Ruth Etting, who just returned to America, already has movie offers . . . Five days after Dorothy Kilgallen arrives here after her round-the-world flight her book will be published. It will consist of reproductions of all the newspaper stories relating to her flight.

KNOWLEDGE: Gaumont-British's film, "Nine Days a Queen," now is being shown to American audiences. This Nova Pilbeam picture originally was called "Lady Mary Jane," for the producers felt that this was the most descriptive title for the historic tale. The American representative, however, insisted that local audiences wouldn't get it. A test, therefore, was made . . . They called their phone operator and asked the lady: "What do you know about 'Lady Mary Jane?'" . . . She answered: "In what race is she running?" . . . The new title immediately was decided upon.

SPEECH: Ben Bernie visited the Cotton Club Sunday night and was summoned to the mike—with a warning to confine himself solely to comments on the show and to refrain from making his usual offstage compaign speech . . . Bernie agreed, took the mike and said: "Remember, folks—you never saw a show like this during a Republican Administration."

DRAMA: Russia's theatrical producers have been duly impressed by the visit of Brooks Atkinson, the drama critic. And Nikolai Akimov, Moscow showman, has determined to present to the proletariat the best uncolored dramatic pieces offered by the capitalistic stage . . . Akimov, therefore, is producing "Hamlet," and has plastered the city with posters heralding the event.

Kay Francis Is Ardent Fan and Sees Them All

Kay Francis declares there's only one fault with her system of making all her pictures at once, with no rest in between, and then taking a several-month vacation.

Kay has an elaborate system of seeing pictures. She keeps up on production facts, so by the time films at the various studios are finished she knows pretty well which ones she wants to see. These—and it's always a long list—are noted down in a little blue book she always carries with her.

Her maid, Ida, cuts ads of theater programs from Los Angeles, Hollywood and suburban papers. It is impossible for the star to see all the films she wishes to see at first-run theaters; often she'll catch one at some tiny theater far out of town. And on accasion she'll drive that far to see a film.

When she makes one of these far-flung expeditions she'll usually leave the studio without even taking her make-up off. She'll have dinner at some little eatery in Ventura, Covina, Pomona or points north, south, east or west—then attend the early show, and drive back.

She gets around the double-feature problem by phoning the theater to see when the picture she wants to view is going to be shown. But on occasion she'll sit through a double feature, she's that ardent a fan!

Just now, however, Kay is filming "Stolen Holiday." Following it she will be able to take in all the pictures she has missed through working nights, having to study dialogue, or rest for a difficult sequence next day.

This will be particularly true in event European unrest curtails her usual three-month sojourn abroad, as it seems at this time that it will. She may, however, go to the Orient or the South Seas instead. But wherever she goes, she'll see pictures.

"I go as far away from Hollywood as possible for a complete rest and change of scenery," Kay declares. "This, however, doesn't mean a rest from seeing pictures. I enjoy seeing a good picture at all times."

Her taste in pictures is wide and democratic. Good plays and books that have been cinematized are probably her top favorites, but a good lively "Western" or comedy often intrigues her. During her concentrated work on pictures, she is choosy simply because there are more pictures she especially wishes to view than time permits her to attend.

Unlike so many fans, she doesn't follow personalities so much as stories. She knows a brilliant star may not be effective in a poor role, a weak story, or one not suited to that star's particular talents.

Little

"THE GILDED LILY." Paramount picturization of a story by Melville Baker and Jack Kirkland, adapted to the screen by Claude Binyon, starring Claudette Colbert with Fred MacMurray, Ray Milland, C. Aubrey Smith, Luis Alberni, Edward Craven, Donald Meek, Ferdinand Munier, Grace Bradley, Claude King and Edward Gargan. Directed by Wesley Ruggles. A revival.

The picture that brought Fred MacMurray into the public's interested attention as a leading man and potential star was revived at the Little Theater yesterday. Its title is, "The Gilded Lily"; its star, Claudette Colbert.

This will be recalled by the seasoned picturegoer as one of the light comedy hits of 1935. Its principal characters are a stenographer and a young newspaperman. They do all of the commonplace things, going about their humdrum tasks, from bus rides up and down Fifth avenue to eating popcorn on the library steps. Then the girl develops dreams of romance and a life of aristocratic ease. In the subway she meets her Prince Charming—scion of a noble British house traveling incognito in the United States.

The romantic dreams of the stenographer seem almost within reach of realization when the noble young man quietly fades out of the picture. Then Pete Dawes, the reporter, goes to work and through a series of gaudy stories builds Marilyn David into a glamorous night club figure. She is booked abroad and again meets her Prince Charming—and the same thing happens all over again. Marilyn and Pete wind up eating popcorn on the library steps again.

This is a well-night perfect vehicle for Miss Colbert and enlists the services of numerous others who contribute greatly to its worth, among them Ray Milland, who will be seen today as one of the principals in "The Big Broadcast of 1937," at the Palace.

The bill is rounded out by the customary short subjects and newsreel.

Suffolk, Va., Oct. 22 (AP).—Judge Armond W. Scott, colored Municipal Court judge, of Washington, D. Jimmie Fidler In Hollywood

Publicity Error.

Hollywood, Oct. 22.

Randolph Scott did not help his popularity with the press through his mis-handling of publicity about his marriage to one of the oh-so-social Duponts of Virginia. When it came time to release news of his secret wedding, Scott gave the story to a fan magazine writer and completely ignored newspaper columnists whose job it is to deal with such facts. His act seems even stranger in view of the fact that he leaned rather eagerly on columnists' shoulders earlier in his career.

TED HEALY.

Yesterday Ted Healy and I were strolling down a studio street when we saw approaching us from the rear a bevy of chorus lovelies. We purposely slowed our walk so they might pass us; even so, we reached street's end first and turned to our left. Twenty paces on, Ted glanced back and hissed, "Don't look now, but we went the wrong way!" The girls had turned right!

Nobody will ever accuse slow-talking Gary Cooper of exaggeration. The other hot midday he was engaged in a scene in which he was on the verge of being burned at the stake by Indians. Flames leaped high about him, and once they got so close, cameras were stopped and his garments were dampened so they would not catch fire. When the scene was done and Gary had drenched three towels with his own prespiration, I said (rather inanely, it now strikes me), "Hot, wasn't it Coop?" "Well," he responded after careful consideration, "it was kind of warm."

In course of his highly colored life, Victor Jory has been in love six times, and always with red-headed women. Five of them have died tragic deaths, but the sixth, very much alive, said to me just yesterday, "I proved even more tragic for Victor. I married him." In case this gives you wrong ideas, they seem to be making a nice thing of marriage.

I have noticed that Paul Lukas shuns ham and eggs. I have seen him shudder at mention of them: I have seen him refuse to touch them for picture scenes. Today, for lack of something to talk about, I asked him why?

It seems, when Paul came to this country from Hungary ten years ago, he could not speak one word of English. A ship steward requested his breakfast order and Paul could only shrug, whereupon the steward suggested ham and eggs. Paul repeated the three simple words, nodded assent. Those were the only English words he knew, and throughout the sea voyage and for eight days until he met a fellow Hungarian in NewYork, he fed on the only dish he knew how to order, ham and eggs.

Social and Diplomatic Circles Turn Out in Great Numbers For Inter-American Horse Show at Meadowbrook Course Here

By Marylyn Reeve.

Amid a riot of color, the Inter-American Horse Show whirled off to a thrilling start yesterday afternoon at Meadowbrook Grounds. The nearby trees were splashed with dull golds, tawny oranges, deep reds and soft greens. Against this brilliant background neat little square flags of red and white waved and snapped in the breeze. The warm sunshine made it seem like early summer, and certainly the gay colors of the clothes of the spectators seemed anything but wintry.

At 2 o'clock the Cavalry band, its members accomplished in horsemanship, as well as musicians, entered the ring. Then followed the colorful ceremony of raising the colors of the three competing countries. Atop a tall rustic T pole the three flags were flown—the Chilean red, white and blue on the left, the Mexican red, white and green in the center and on the right our own Stars and Stripes.

A mounted escort from the Tenth Cavalry, of Fort Myer, on spirited horses and carrying lances from which waved scarlet and gold pennants, accompanied the three teams as they circled the ring and paid their respects, while the national anthems of the countries were played.

Capital Enthusiastic.

Washington has indeed become enthusiastic over the show and yesterday found the diplomatic and official sets well represented. Some were unable to be present for the entire show, but were there for as long as possible. The new Ambassador of Poland and Mme. Potocki, who recently arrived here from New York, put aside their unpacking and settling long enough to take in a bit of the show. They arrived late in the afternoon. She was in dark brown with a beige knitted blouse and unusual hat of brown woven felt, that consisted of a band around her dark smoothly coiffed head, and a perky visor in the front. He was in tweeds and hatless. With them was a roguish Scottie who tugged at the end of his bright red leash. Also following the policy of "better late than not at all" was Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, wife of the Secretary of the Treasury, who was in black with a mink scarf wrapped about her throat.

The Ambassador of Chile, Senor Don Manuel Trucco, who witnessed the victory of his team yesterday, was accompanied by his three daughters. Senorita Marta was in rust with brown hat and accessories; Senorita Graciela was in all brown, and little Senorita Rebeca chose black for her costume. Their embassy was nearly all present. The First Secretary, Senor Don Sergio Buneeus, was accompanied by his attractive blonde wife, who was wearing light blue. They divided their time between the Ambassador's box and that occupied by the wives of the members af the team.

New Ambassador Attends.

The new Ambassador of Italy and Signora Suvich, the latter smartly costumed in black printed with small white figures, had with them the new First Secretary of the Embassy, Prince del Drago.

The German Ambassador, Herr Hans Luther, spent part of the afternoon in the box with Col. and Mrs. Jonathan Wainwright. Mrs. Wainwright was attired in eel gray and her husband was resplendent in blue dress uniform of the design just accepted. Near them was Commissioner Melvin Hazen, the Minister of the Dominican Republic and Mme. Pastoriza, who was wearing black crepe, a smart little hat pulled down on her soft silvery curls, and Mme. Espaillet, in wine wool crepe; Senor Sebastian Valverde, and Senor and Senora de Godoy, and Rear Admiral and Mrs. Cary T. Grayson, she in a green jersey with hat and skirt of a gay Scotch plaid.

The Patterson girls, Senorita Olga and Mme. Schlatter, the former in a bright print, and her sister in dusk blue, were early arrivals and later were joined by their father, the Cuban Ambassador, and their brother and sister-in-law, Senor and Senora de Patterson.

Mrs. Daniel C. Stapleton, in all-black, her plush hat trimmed in the front with a perky plume, had with her her daughter, Miss Stellita Stapleton, in olive green and brown, and Miss Mary McDowell, who had on a becoming ensemble of red, blue and green plaid.

Mrs. Robert Watson was wearing a brown wool frock luxuriously trimmed with mink, and her round beret-styled hat was circled with a band of the same glossy fur.

Among others at the opening day were the Ambassador of China, Dr. Sao-Ke Alfred Sze; the First Secretary of the Mexican Embassy, Senor Rafael Fuentes; Miss Kathryn Fuqua, who brightened her black suit with a rose-colored cravat and sheer stockings to match; Mrs. Rudolph Kauffman, in light-blue bucle with a red felt hat; Mrs. Laird Dunlop, in brown tweeds and matching suede accessories; Miss Dolores Barreto, Lieut. and Mrs. Henri Luebbermann, Capt. Bernard Luebbermann, of Fort Hoyle; Dr. L. S. Rowe, the Assistant Military Attache of the Mexican Embassy, and Senora de Palmer and the latter's sister, Senorita Theresa Corrado; Mrs. Harold Hinton, in sky blue and tan, with a kerchief of dark blue knotted about her throat, joined Mrs. Hugh D. Auchincloss, who wore brown, and Mrs. Eldridge Jordan, in their box.

Some of the members of the younger set present were Miss Kay Pearson, in a gray tailleur; Miss Dicka Gannon, in golden rust; Miss Jane Whittaker, Miss Polly Wirgman, Mr. Bob Phillips, Miss Maria Theresa Macias and Senor and Senora de Mantilla-Ortega.

Return to D. C.

Mrs. McLean Gander and Mrs. Archibald McLean are in Washington for a short visit and are staying at the Roosevelt Hotel. Mrs. Gander is the daughter of former Representative and Mrs. L. H. Hadley, of Bellingham, Wash., and with her parents spent last winter in the Capital at the Roosevelt.

Angeline Smith, Mr. Eastwood Are Married

Wedding Is Performed at Presbyterian Church at Takoma Park.

Miss Angeline Clara Smith, daughter of Mr. Homer A. A. Smith, chief of the Washington office of the Panama Canal, and Mrs. Smith, of Takoma Park, Md., was married to Mr. James William Eastwood, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Eastwood, of 6611 Eighth street, last night at Takoma Park Presbyterian Church. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. E. Paul Schearrer, pastor, before a large gathering of relatives and friends. Mrs. W. Paul Hamm, of Takoma Park, sang, accompanied by Mrs. Dudley C. Jackson at the organ.

The bride wore a long velvet gown fashioned on princess lines, with long tight sleeves, and a veil of tulle which was fastened about a turban of velvet with a maline crown from which fell a face-length veil. She carried white roses, gardenias and lilies of the valley. Her father gave her in marriage.

The maid of honor was Miss Elsa Tavenner, of Washington, who wore a gold crepe evening dress with a redingote of moss velvet and a turban with a chin-length veil to match the green. She wore gold slippers and carried large gold-colored dahlias.

Mrs. David Haas and Mrs. Donald Leroy Turner, both of Takoma Park, sisters of the bride, were her other attendants. They were dressed alike in gowns made similar to that of the maid of honor, but their redingotes were of rust-colored velvet with matching hats, and dresses of gold-colored crepe. They carried bouquets of smaller dahlias in the rust shades.

Little Carla Lee Turner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Donald Leroy, and May Frances Johnston, niece of Mr. Eastwood, were flower girls, wearing long gold taffeta dresses with ruffled capelets and sashes lined with green. They carried baskets of roses.

Mr. Eastwood served as best man for his son and the ushers were Mr. Homer Smith, brother of the bride; Mr. R. E. Stanley, Mr. David Haas and Mr. Arthur Southerland.

Later the couple left for a boat trip to Florida, the bride wearing a traveling costume of dark green with matching accessories and a corsage of gardenias which formed the center of her bridal bouquet. They will live at Third and Hamilton streets upon their return in two weeks.

THE MERRY WHIRL by MARYLYN

Dorothy Lee Ward's luncheon yesterday before the horse show at Rock Creek Park was a jolly affair. Her home on Massachusetts avenue is most artistically decorated and houses some pieces worthy of a museum.

Following the custom set so recently in honor of the Mexican team, cocktails were served in the morning while the topics of the day were discussed.

Josef Nemecek, of the Czechoslovakian Legation, protested about the "unseasonable" heat of the day and voiced his sympathy for those riding in the show, not to mention their trusty four-footed friends.

Gen. John C. Beaumont, who is being congratulated upon his "B. G." by all who run into him, can and did tell some very interesting tales of his tour in the Orient. He is a most unusual looking person. Tall, straight, tanned with black brows and the contrast of white, curly hair. He has just come here for station and is being welcomed on all sides. Strange, but the last time he was in town he was entertained in Mrs. Ward's house "several owners ago."

Back to the hostess again. She is one of the few people we have met who can wear these new high shoes and really get away with it. Yesterday, with her brown knobby tweed skirt and powder blue blouse, she wore brown suede "lacers" and they were very smart. Incidentally, her butter knives and coffee spoons are quite the silverware after our own heart. They are of a delicate pattern and at the tips of the handles are pieces of jade as big as nickels. All of which reminds us of the Orient, China in particular, and the rather surprising fact that the Chinese butler is named Valentino.

• • • •

Others from the Diplomatic Corps who were enjoying the hospitality of the charming hostess from Georgia were the Charge d'Affaires of Rumania and Mme. Popovici. She had on a becoming outfit. The skirt was of black and the chic little jacket of gray, black and gold checks.

• • • •

Snapshots we shall remember vividly indeed include: Spunky little Margaret Cotter, climbing back upon Rocksie, after a surprise spill and completing the course. Not only that, but when she returned to her parents' box for a breathing spell, pooh-poohed the very idea she had been hurt—Mrs. Jack Whitney walking about just before the show, wearing a crisp white coat with her tan breeches and black boots, and even after she had ridden several times, the coat still unwrinkled and spotless.

The "home" team coming in second in spite of the seemingly too steep penalization of Maj. Tupper Cole, whose stirrup and saddle parted, but whose performance was clean other than that.

Morale Built By Cheerful Living Mode

Environment Has Broad Influence on Life of Woman.

Survey by Miss Dickson Shows Comfortable Room Is Factor.

The effect of a becoming hat on a business woman's morale has long been recognized. But equally important as a morale builder is a cheerful and comfortable room to which to return at night.

Wide experience in studying the occupational interests and problems of young employed women has convinced Irene Dickson, hostess at the new Strong residence of the Y. W. C. A., that self-confidence, business success and personality development are dependent to a large degree on the kind of room in which one lives.

Employed women, Miss Dickson believes, should rid themselves of the idea that "just any room" will do for shelter. For they cannot avoid, she points out, having their housing background reflected in their work and in their personalities.

Room Influences Moods.

"Anything that builds self-confidence is of value to the employed girl," says Miss Dickson. "Clothes and careful grooming help a great deal. But so does the right kind of a room—especially one that is cheerful. Color and design influence our moods and our outlook a great deal more than we realize. The girl who wants to do her best work cannot live in depressing surroundings."

Miss Dickson has no hard and fast rules for an employed girl's budget, but she believes housing should have as generous a share as possible. The general rule of one-fourth of the wages for shelter cannot always be carried out, she admits, especially among women in the lower wage brackets. In interviewing about 300 girl applicants for rooms at Strong Residence she found some of the girls paying from one-third to one-half of their wages for room and board.

Even though a girl is handicapped financially in attaining her ideal room, yet she should give careful consideration to what choice she makes, Miss Dickson believes.

Few General Rules.

Here are a few general rules she suggests for the employed woman who is planning a nook of her own:

Consider first of all how the room will appear with the lights on. Most of the time that an employed woman spends in her room is after nightfall.

Get as much ventilation and light as possible.

Insist upon a comfortable mattress.

Have at least one chair that provides perfect comfort and that will not get "humyp."

Have adequate closet space and if possible see that closets are tall enough to accommodate evening dresses.

See that drawer space is adequate.

The rooms in the new Strong residence are designed particularly for employed women and embody all the features stressed by Miss Dickson. Particular attention has been paid to cheerful decoration. Walls are apricot, blue, tan and yellow and are varied in color on each oor to prevent monotony, and the "institutional" effect. Curtains and draperies correspond to the wall colors.

Latticed doors are an aid to ventilation and Venetian blinds regulate the light. Each room is equipped with bed, bureau, a secretary with desk and drawers, one easy chair and one or more plain ones.

The residence will accommodate 125 permanent guests and 61 transients. Residents are from 17 to 33 years of age.

Many Turned Away.

Those in charge of the residence have had to turn away many older employed women. The housing of this group, Miss Dickson believes, constitutes an unsolved social and economic problem. While connected with the Y. W. C. A. in Dayton, Ohio, Miss Dickson worked on a study of occupational interests of employed women. This study emphasized particularly the problem of the older employed woman who finds herself at a stalemate in her business or profession, who can look forward to diminishing economic opportunity and who has not adequate opportunities for living comfortably and with sufficient self-expression.

The Modern Business Girl's 'Castle'

Especially designed to meet the needs of business girls are the rooms in the new Strong residence of the Y. W. C. A., to be dedicated Sunday. Above, Miss Mary Lee Hine is shown in a typical room. Note the Venetian blinds, colorful drapes and secretary with ample drawer space.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Wife of 23 and Husband, 27, Married Five Years, Believe Union a Mistake; Would Part as Friends.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am 23 and my husband is 27. We have been married five years. Our first two years were the happiest we ever knew, but these last three years have been miserable, and more than once we have just about given up the idea of staying together any longer. Our families greatly disapproved of our marriage, but we were so in love that we wanted only each other, and didn't see how much we differed in our ways and friends. We were happy just being together.

• • • •

Now we see our mistake and are terribly sorry, and wish we could part while we are still friends. We have nothing in common. My husband loves baseball, basket ball, fishing and wrestling, while I love tennis, golf, dancing, swimming and bridge. We have tried going 50-50 lots of times, but it doesn't seem to help solve our problem any. We don't even like each other's friends, so it seems we were not meant for each other, and now that our love is dead we are both so ashamed of our marriage.

• • • •

We simply won't go to our parents for help or advice. All we can do is try to find our own way out. My husband and I have talked all this over and have decided that I should write you for advice. Do you think we should stay together and take a chance on being happy in later years? Or should we get a divorce and go our separate ways while we are still young and still friends? Or do you advise parting for a while and seeing if that would restore our love?

• • • •

We only hope you are able to solve our problem. We will be so relieved, for we don't want our parents to suspect anything until we are both absolutely sure what we are going to do. Please give us your suggestions. Sincerely,

ANXIOUS COUPLE.

• • • •

DEAR ANXIOUS COUPLE: If is true that you have no interests or friends in common, that your romantic love has burned down to a dead gray ash, that you are genuinely ashamed of the marriage; and if, in addition, you have no mutually incurred obligations (such as children for instance) to hold you together, I believe the best thing to do is separate now—while you are, as you say, still young and still friends. You can make it a trial separation of six months or so, if you wish. But such a separation won't prove a great deal unless it is possible for each of you to become completely independent of the other. In other words, it won't be a real separation unless you, the wife, area ble to support yourself without help from your husband.

• • • •

Can you arrange a separation on such a basis, by finding a self-sustaining job in case you have none at present? By sub-letting your home or apartment furnished (in case you own furniture)? And by making arrangements that free both of you for the duration of a stipulated period, from any responsibilities that savor of the domestic set-up? If so, try it, by all means.

• • • •

From what you say, it would appear that you are lamentably mismated and that your respective destinies in the field of married happiness and success lie far apart. And that often happens when persons marry so young. After all, you were only 18 and your husband only 22 when you pledged yourselves to each other for life. Neither of you had sufficiently, found yourselves in relation to life and other human beings to be able to say with any degree of finality who was, and who was not, a compatible life companion.

• • • •

It speaks well for both of you, however, that you are willing to shoulder complete responsibility for any mistake which may have been committed; that you are able to study your situation so objectively, and co-operate so splendidly in working toward a mutually saving solution. I would that all young couples could bring the same fair-minded intelligence to bear upon their matrimonial problems. Both of you deserve the best of luck, and I am sure that you will have it.

M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

TODAY'S HEALTH TALK

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

Nature's ideal food is milk. In fact, it is the only article of diet that has no other purpose. Plants produce fruits so that birds and animals may be attracted and the seeds thus disseminated widely. All of which is designed to perpetuate the species. The new babe feeds on his mother's milk, and there is no food or combination of foods quite so palatable or so easily digested.

What is milk? Only 13 per cent is food—the balance, water. The solid material is a peculiar type of protein called casein, which contains certain minerals. Fat occurs in tiny globules—an emulsion—and constitutes about 4 per cent of the total, while carbohydrate is milk sugar. We cannot depend upon milk for iron nor vitamins C or D. For the former, egg yoke or some iron containing vegetable for the latter, orange juice and cod liver oil must be given.

What about its digestibility? Many of us think of milk as a fluid, but it really is a solid. As soon as it reaches the stomach it is coagulated by the ferments of the gastric juice. This is the reason that every one is cautioned to drink milk slowly, so that the curds shall be small and thus more readily mixed with the digestive fluids. Those to whom it gives distress are probably milk bolters—to get it over with.

No article of food calls for quite so much care in handling and marketing. Bacteria love it and are happy when they are able to gain access to this rather superior culture medium. This means that its purity must be safeguarded at all points—from the animal that produces it to the consumer—with the strictist sanitary precautions. It should come from healthy animals and milking should be done under as clean conditions as it is possible to provide. Dirt from the udder or from the hands or clothing of the milker are ready sources of impurities.

Every child should consume approximately one quart of milk a day, and every adult at least a pint. We must recall that it is our principal source of calcium and phosphorous, and it must be clean and free from disease producing bacteria. Even though pasteurization is practiced we must remember that it is carried out by human hands and is, therefore, subject to error.

Unless clean or pasteurized cow's milk is available it is far wiser to use evaporated milk, even though the taste is not quite so inviting. This is whole milk from which about 40 per cent of the water has been driven off.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

New York, Oct. 22.

AS A GENERAL thing, I don't go in much for these star-spangled "parties" which turn the town's theatrical and movie sectors into screaming shambles. They cut too much into a life which must be devoted to such stern things as tracing trends, batting out a daily piece and trying to cope with the whims and foibles of a strange man who has been hanging around my home these eight years.

ALICE HUGHES.

A few days ago, however, I gave in and went to one at the Waldorf for Noel Coward and Gertrude Lawrence, those two bubbling Britons who are co-starring among us in a series of nine Cowardian one-acters, lumped under the general title of "Tonight at 8:30" and presented three an evening.

Well, it was all I expected. Gertie is one of these slim, tall, big-eyed girls whose nerves actually seem on the surface of her skin, yet who goes on year after year doing good work in the theater, exciting thousands of people and positively dripping "glamour," drat the word! One of the features of this shennanegan was Gertie's modeling all her new clothes, for us—duds turned out by London's Norman Hartnell. My favorite was a dream of a grayish-pink chiffon dance dress—the sort that only a tall, slim, colorful girl can sport with profit.

All Gertie's friends were there—Tallou Bankhead, happy over her current Broadway hit; Ruth Etting, the sweet singer, and of course Bea Lillie, the irrepressible. Every time she lifted an eyebrow people screamed and fell down dead. When it was over, I felt like last year's taffeta. I had a good time, but I can't take it like these amazing actors. Back to the typewriter for Hughes, built for ease and not for speed!

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—One of those things happened at a small social gathering the other night, and the next morning two dressmakers caught it plenty. Mrs. Byron Foy, daughter of Walter P. Chrysler, and another pretty young thing turned up wearing identical black net dresses. They couldn't lose themselves in a crowd, for there wasn't one, so they just had to smile sweetly. That's the sort of horror that men can never understand, being used to the machine-made anonymity of black dinner clothes . . .

• • • •

My current and unusual plunge into the gay whirl of our faster social set has shown me that there are only two dances now in vogue at which the young folks really work—the rhumba and a Viennese waltz. During these the steppers keep their minds strictly on their work. The dear old fox-trot, at present, seems to be little more than a conversation piece. The boys and girls just sort of amble around the floor during a fox-trot, no doubt making the smallest sort of small talk. Young things tell me that a night of rhumbas will easily wear out three pair of costly stockings.

• • • •

ANOTHER BIG shot has come to the top in the New York store world—Claire Lang, a lass from Budapest who has just been made style director of one of the biggest emporia on the avenue. She's a young looking girl with an accent that is hard to dissect. Born in Budapest, she learned English in Scotland and then married a Russian child-psychologist! Untangle that, if you can! She's the newest member of the attractive, forceful group which numbers Dorothy Shaver, Mary Lewis, Estelle Hamburger, Tobe, Hortense Odlum, Gimble and Dorothy Frankau. They're a wonderful pose of keen, alert women—and good to their husbands, if any.

Syrian Women Await Leader

Damascus, Syria (AP).—The women of Damascus, one of the latest strongholds of the Moslem veil, are seeking a leader for a campaign to establish their right to go bare-faced in public.

The veil has been discarded largely in Turkey, in Egypt, and more recently in Iran. In Damascus, however, women still dare not appear on the streets with their faces exposed.

The wife of a Syrian cabinet member attempted a revolt against the centuries-old custom some years ago and was pelted with stones as she went through Damascus without a veil.

Conventions are such in Damascus that removal of the veil is a subject which can scarcely be discussed publicly, but Syrian women are chafing under the band on their faces and many of them express yearnings privately for a leader to inaugurate a move to end the practice.

Despite the place assigned her under Moslem usages and the customs of the country, the Syrian woman takes an active part in politics. In recent riots against the French mandate, veiled women gathered stones for their menfolk to hurl and many of them were taken to jail after defying the police.

Although the bulk of Syria's population is Mohemmedan, Christians are an important element and have had churches here since ancient times.

New Autumn Styles Influence Make-up

Cosmetics to Complement Tints of Outfit.

Hollywood, Calif.—Approximately 50 per cent of the fall clothes here are black. Dark woodsy greens are next in importance in the fall color calendar. When wearing green it is wise to carry the predominating tint of the color out in the make-up. Thus, if the green veers more to the blue side, use make-up with a faint bluish cast as well as dark blue mascara if your eyes are blue. If the yellow is emphasized more in the green, a suntan shade is carried out in the rouge and powder with a real orange tone to the lipstick.

Rust and grayed blues are also colors which figure importantly in the gowns Orry-Kelly is designing for personal as well as screen wardrobes of stars like Marion Davies and Joan Blondell. Rust calls for a peachlike make-up with a rusty shade in the lipstick and nail lacquer. For blue ensembles there is repeated a faint cast of that color in the make-up. For high style in formal wear there is even a chance here for silvery eyeshadows.

For wine shades, it is well to use a blush foundation with a trace of blue in the rest of the make-up. The popular new biege and grey shades are trying to wear unless especial care is given to the make-up, which should have a distinctly roseate cast.

Paris Evening Dresses Are Classic in Design

Paris (U.P.).—Paris still shows many classic evening dresses, made with high necklines in front with a backless decollette that clings closely to the body to the floor. The skirts, often extending into a train in back, are usually so tight that walking is difficult and dancing impossible.

As was the case last season, evening skirts vary in length from the floor to above the ankles.

Silhouettes Variable.

Paris (U.P.).—Evening gowns can follow almost any silhouette this winter. They can be slim sheaths which mould the figure closely or they can follow flowing lines with as much as six or seven yards of material in the skirt alone.

Maritime Commission

Tomorrow should find the entire personnel of the old Shipping Board and Merchant Fleet Corporation transferred to the newly created Maritime Commission, according to commission officials.

All of the 1,300 or so employes of the two old agencies are to be shifted and not until those shifts have been made will new people be taken on, we were told. Under the terms of the law transferred employes will acquire regular civil service status after completing a six months' probationary period.

How many more employes will be hired by the commission is still uncertain. However, a fine flock of exempted positions remain to be filled after election—including a secretary and director for each of five divisions, a general counsel and clerk to each of the commissioners, three general assistants, two inspectors at each shipyard and 12 experts in each of these categories, naval architects, attorneys, examiners and special experts.

National Labor Relations Board unionists are tickled pink over the posting of the notice of a vacancy as secretary to the new board member, Donald W. Smith, as per the union's promotion agreement with the board.

Melody Cheese

There's a new domestic cheese, bearing the rather intriguing name of "Melody Cheese," on the market and Robert R. Farrar, of the Bureau of Dairy Industry of the Department of Agriculture, is responsible.

The cheese is really an American imitation of the Bel Paese cheese developed in Italy and imported into this country on a rather small scale. Import prices range from 60 to 85 cents a pound while the "Melody" cheese, which is being made by a Pennsylvania concern, should be about 50 cents a pound.

Unusually mild and slightly salty, the cheese has a soft, waxy texture which makes it ideal for both slicing and spreading. It has no distinctive odor, which in itself is a distinction of some sort.

Labor Lodge No. 12 has passed a resolution urging A. F. of L. president, William Green, to use his good offices to reaffiliate the five "New Deal" lodges expelled from the A. F. G. E. A similar resolution was slated for passage at the WPA lodge's meeting last night.

Tiger Love

Tigers, lions and other "cats" at the National Zoo are always fed separately for fear they will tear each other apart—that is all save the pair of Sumatran tigers, and therein lies a story.

The pair is from a lot of six adult tigers trapped by a New York City tiger hunter in Sumatra. While the animals were still in their individual crates, Zoo Director William M. Mann was given the choice of two of the lot.

When the tigers arrived at the Zoo every available guard and Zoo attendant was rounded up and equipped with steel poles and water hose to force the animals apart should they get into a battle. Tiger No. 1 was let down the runway and into his cage. He was still roaring disapproval of his new quarters when tiger No. 2 was started down the runway, the attendants gripping their poles and water hose tensely.

Into the cage came tiger No. 2. For a moment the two animals exchanged stares and then started toward one another. Dr. Mann vows that you could hear the sigh of relief of the Zoo attendants over the roars of the tigers as the pair rubbed heads together and started licking one another—apparently they had been friends in the jungles of Sumatra.

Runway at Airport In Service Sunday

A 4,200-foot runway, one of the longest in the country, will be placed in use at Washington Airport Sunday, despite claims it encroached on Federal property, Samuel J. Solomon, airport manager, said yesterday.

While finishing touches were being applied, the Interior Department was going forward with plans to have the Department of Justice launch court action to determine title of the disputed land.

The area in question is part of the so-called "no man's land," jurisdiction of which is claimed by both Virginia and the District of Columbia.

U. S., District Officers Raid Opium 'Dive'

Four Chinese Arrested, Elaborate Equipment Captured Here.

Anslinger Denies Wide Drive Planned; Tip Came From West.

Battering their way into a third-floor apartment in the 400 block of H street northwest, Federal narcotic agents and District detectives yesterday raided an elaborate opium den and arrested four Chinese.

With the prisoners was seized a quantity of opium, heroin opium pipes, heating lamps, hatchets and other paraphernalia. The raiders were armed with a warrant charging "Joe Lee" with sale of opium.

Those arrested gave their names as Lee Wing, alias Joe Lee, 44; Tip Wong, 40; Mark Ging, 28, and Chen Han, 35. Wing allegedly is proprietor of the place. Wong and Ging gave their addresses as the H street flat, and Han said he was from New York. They were held on investigation charges.

Two barred doors were smashed by the raiding party which included Federal Agents L. A. Pruitt and Paul G. Brigham, and Detective Sergts. Hugh Brodie and Jake Wolfe. They entered the second floor of the building by forcing open a window from the roof of the adjacent structure.

The apartment contained three bunks on which smokers might recline as they puffed their long pipes, luxurious pillows, silken screens and several Chinese lanterns. There was an improvised workshop where pipes could be made and raw opium heated over lamps.

Narcotics agents here were "tipped off" to the den by authorities in Chicago, it was learned unofficially last night. A small wholesale house in Chicago, it was said, shipped opium and heroin here in cigar boxes. The dope originally came from Hong Kong, it was asserted, traveling half around the world.

Commissioner of Narcotics H. J. Anslinger, however, last night denied that the raid was the beginning of a citywide narcotics drive.

"It was just a routine matter," said he.

Story on King's Marital Rights Is Suppressed

with the law as it affects the King's marriage, saying:

"The law in England imposes only one limitation on the marriage of the sovereign. Under the act of settlement of 1701 he may not marry a Roman Catholic without forfeiting his throne. The royal marriage act of 1772 declares that no member of the royal family may marry either royalty or commoner without the consent of the sovereign, but the sovereign himself may marry whom he please, provided only that his wife is not a Roman Catholic."

Edward Calls Council.

London, Oct. 22 (AP).—King Edward tonight called a meeting for October 27 of his privy council—to whom he would make formal announcement if ever he decided to marry.

European problems arising from the civil war were believed scheduled for discussion, but speculation also was aroused by the divorce action of Mrs. Ernest Simpson.

Mrs. Simpson's case will be heard at the Assizes, in Ipswich, which will be opened tomorrow.

New indications that the Virginia divorce of Mrs. Wallis Simpson, American friend of King Edward of England, granted in Warrenton, Va., in 1927, is considered a closed issue came yesterday from State Senator Aubrey Weaver, her attorney in the 10-year-old suit.

The divorce, separating her from Commander Earl Winfield Spencer, United States Navy flier, was "perfectly legal and valid," Senator Weaver declared. Mrs. Simpson, he said, complied with Virginia laws by establishing residence in Warrenton a year before the action was filed.

Circuit Court Judge Peck Alexander, now presiding in Warrenton, said he would order records in the case sealed if a motion were made by Senator Weaver.

Meanwhile, Raymond Neudecker, Washington attorney, refused to comment on his retention by a mysterious client to investigate the decree.

Railroads Seek New Rate Scale To Offset Loss

$115,000,000 Revenue Ends This Year, Need to Meet Income Drop Cited.

Moving to offset imminent reductions in rail revenues, and at the same time to simplify the Nation's freight rate structure, the Nation's railroads yesterday petitioned the Interstate Commerce Commission for permission to file tariffs readjusting the present rate fabric.

The rail proposals, which the Association for American Railroads said would "result in a somewhat lower level of charges than that now in effect," are designed to compensate somewhat for the loss of $115,000,000 in revenue when emergency surcharges expire at the end of the year.

"Although the volume of traffic during the past year has shown an improvement as compared with the years immediately preceding," the petition stated, "it is self-evident that the railroads are not in a position to withstand the loss of revenue which would result from the elimination of the emergency charges in the absence of a revision of base rates.

Fear Revenue Losses.

"Even with the proposed rates, the railroads will still be in dire need of additional revenues which are to be obtained, if at all, only in the event of a very substantial increase in the present volume of traffic."

The emergency rates, expiring December 31, originally were authorized by the commission after a showing by the roads that operating expenses on the basis of 1935 business had increased by some $250,000,000, as result of higher labor, material and supply costs. Due to further advances in material and supply prices, operating costs have now increased by $300,000,000, the roads argued.

Without the emergency charges, or further revision of the rate structure, Class 1 railroads would have failed by approximately $60,600,000 to have earned their fixed charges for the first eight months of 1936, the petition contended.

Net Income $16,000,000.

The petition did not ask the commission to approve the proposed changes in the rate structure at this time, but to modify existing orders of the commission to give the roads an opportunity to lay the suggested revisions before it.

"With respect to the classification ratings on articles in less than carload lots or any quantity, rated not less than third class in official, Southern, Western and Illinois classifications, it is proposed, with few exceptions, to make them uniform on the basis of the lowest rating in any one of the classifications," read the petition.

"This will result in more than 1,800 reductions in ratings, and less than 40 increases. It will also constitute an important forward step in the simplification of tariffs."

Abattoir Expansion Project Visited by City Planners

Group Hinted Opposed to Construction of This Type in Zone Following Protests of Residents on Benning Road.

Two men charged with the responsibility of beautifying Washington and preserving its monumental character sniffed and inspected yesterday as they tried to make up their minds on the abattoir question now disturbing the District's officials and citizenry.

Visiting the Benning road site, where Adolf Gobel, Inc., proposes to erect and operate an up-to-date slaughter house, members of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission made mental notes on the existing buildings, peered into cattle stalls, noted the homes and stores nearby.

This morning the commission is expected to recommend for or against the abattoir project. Since Frederic A. Delano, president of the American Planning and Civic Association, which already is on record against it, is also chairman of the park and planning group, it is believed a dissenting vote will be cast when the meeting is resumed today.

The District Commissioners and Col. John W. Oehmann, building inspector, yesterday informed District Court they wish to make further investigations before granting Gobel a building permit. Their statement was in answer to a suit for a writ of mandamus which would compel issuance of the permit.

Complaints have been received from Benning residents who fear the plant would engender unpleasant odors. They also pointed out that the project might be inimical to park and recreational development.

Included in the group that visited the site were Col. Dan I. Sultan, Engineer Commissioner; Capt. Hugh P. Oram, director of inspection; Arno B. Cammerer, executive officer of the planning commission an ddirector of the National Park Service; William A. Delano, architect member of the commission; Dr. Daniel L. Seckinger, assistant health officer, and others.

The answer filed yesterday against the Gobel petition will be argued next week.

The planning commission also inspected Fort Dupont, a short distance from the proposed abattoir site, which CCC labor is transforming into a huge park and picnic area.

2-Day Hearing On D. C. Funds To Open Today

Washington's organized citizenry today will have an opportunity to appeal for larger Federal funds for the Capital.

A two-day public hearing will open at 10 a. m. in Room 208, Commercial National Bank Building, before the fiscal relations committee named by President Roosevelt under authority carried in the 1937 District appropriations act.

The first half hour of the hearing will be broadcast over Station WMAL.

Rufus S. Lusk, secretary of the Washington Taxpayers Association, will be the first witness, followed by Edward Colladay, who will speak for the citizens joint committee on fiscal relations.

Other organizations scheduled to be heard are the Federation of Citizens Associations, the Washington Board of Trade and the Washington Real Estate Board.

People's Counsel William A. Roberts has been invited to explain his proposal to establish a permanent committee whose duty it would be to fix the Federal contribution each year.

The hearing is scheduled to continue all today and into a night session. It will then adjourn until 1:30 p. m. tomorrow, when it will be resumed.

Experts to Survey District Prisons

The Prison Industries Reorganization Administration, established in 1935 by order of President Roosevelt, will make a survey of industrial operations in penal and correctional institutions of the District.

On request of the Board of Public Welfare, the commission asked the survey be completed in time to be submitted to Congress in January.

The administration already has made surveys of prison industries in 13 States and has made recommendations to the President which have led to the allocation of Federal funds for projects in vocational education. Maryland, for example, obtained $60,000 in this fashion.

"The Board of Public Welfare believes that such a survey will result in development of more diversified and effective industries in the penal institutions of the District, and would give the Commissioners a coordinated program for the development of penal institutions of the District."

Street added that the board hopes not only to get information for the better handling of prisoners, but also believes "that additional funds may be secured."

PUC Fixes Hearing for Nov. 2 On Takoma Park Bus Proposal

Following a conference with spokesmen for seven citizens' associations in the Takoma Park area, the Public Utilities Commission decided yesterday to hold a public hearing November 2 on the application of the Capital Transit Co. to substitute buses for street cars along Third and Kennedy streets.

William McK. Clayton, of the Brightwood Citizens Association, appeared as the only outspoken opponent of the petition, but he said others would appear if a public hearing were held.

The Takoma Park District-Maryland Association asked time to study the plan.

Representatives of five other citizens' groups and residents of Kennedy and Third streets indorsed the plan.

The transit company submitted its petition after a prolonged study. Popularity of the rush-hour Takoma Park express bus line convinced the transit company an all-day bus sevice was desiable.

Milk Increase Held Harmful To Producers

Gardiner Warns Sales Will Drop if Consumer Price Is Advanced.

Wallace MayHave Power to Order Deposits on Bottles.

While officials of the Agriculture Adjustment Administration yesterday pondered the question of local milk prices and a threatened milk shortage on the Washington market, W. Gwynn Gardiner, attorney and dairyman, warned of consequences should retail prices be boosted.

If the price of milk to Washington consumers is increased, he said, it will result in injury to the farmer. There will be less milk sold in the District, he pointed out, and other substitutes will be used—such as evaporated and condensed milk.

Solution of the problem, Gardiner decclared, would come if the basic quantity of milk shipped by each farmer was increased in proportion to his production.

"If this is done," Gardiner said in a letter to AAA authorities, "I will assure you there will be ample milk produced and delivered on the Washington market to supply all needed demands."

Cites His Receipts.

As an example, Gardiner pointed out:

"Last month I shipped to the Washington market 44,138 pounds of milk, which as I figure it amounts to approximately 5,132 gallons (there being 8.6 pounds to each gallon of milk). This is broken down to class I and class II milk. I shipped 21,353 gallons of class I milk which I figured in gallons and amount received per gallon, is as follows: 248.2 gallons of class I milk at approximately 27.03 cents per gallon. I shipped 22,785 pounds of class II milk, which I have figured to be approximately 264.9 gallons for which I received 15.39 cents per gallon. Therefore, you will see I am being paid a basic price of 27.03 cents per gallon for less than 50 per cent of my total monthly shipment, and for over 50 per cent of my total monthly shipment, I am receiving only 15.39 cents per gallon.

That is where the shoe pinches the farmer! This, notwithstanding the fact, of course, that all of the milk shipped by me is exactly the same grade of milk and produced from exactly the same herd of cows. Out of this sum I paid $51.20 on one-cent per gallon to the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers Association as a fee for selling my milk, so that the price actually received was one cent per gallon less on each class of milk than the figures above shown."

May Order Deposits.

Meanwhile, following suggestions made at a recent hearing on amendments to the District milk-marketing agreement, it was reported yesterday that Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, under the agriculture adjustment act, may have authority to order milk bottle deposit charges for Washington.

The suggestion for deposits was made at the hearing by Clayton Gore, milk broker, of Leesburg, Va. Gore said he believed a 2-cent deposit per bottle on wholesale milk deliveries would mean a 2½ cents per gallon saving in distributing costs.

Richard Alpin, AAA milk market administrator, said yesterday there is a possibility that Secretary Wallace will be granted authority to order bottle charges.

4th Anniversary Flowers a Puzzle For Chief Brown

Maj. Ernest W. Brown's staff said it with flowers yesterday, for the fourth time in as many years, but the burly, hard-working chief of police didn't know what it was all about.

"It isn't my birthday," he boomed.

Then he recalled that just four years ago yesterday he took command of the Metropolitan Police.

And, ironically enough, he put in the longest day since he has been chief, for around midnight he hastened to the Union Station to supervise police cordons at the arrival of President Roosevelt.

A.F.G.E.Unit Scores Revamping of WPA

Reclassification of more than 100 employes in the project control division of the WPA was criticized last night at a meeting of the WPA Lodge of the American Federation of Government Employes.

The burden of the classification, speakers charged, fell on the employes in the lower brackets. The lodge instructed its grievance committee to protest the classification and voted to distribute a protest leaflet to all WPA employes.

Reclassification was announced yesterday. Dallas Dort, in charge of the project control division, explained the reclassification was made necessary by the recent dismissal of 250 employes and followed along lines laid down by civil service regulations.

Union members charged the classification was "purely arbitrary" and did not follow Civil Service regulations.

Poison Dress Death Fables Deluge City

Stories Go 'Way 'Round and 'Round and Come Out Anywhere.

When early Americans were burning witches in Salem about two centuries ago it was generally a little whispering which, gathering momentum with each sibilant syllable brought attention of witch hunters to a first-class prospect for the pyre.

It seems that such whispering has its counterpart in modern Washington, for a story which would do credit to any witch-seeker is going the rounds here, with gathering momentum which adds daily more complexities and complications to the telling.

The story, for benefit of those who have not heard it, is this:

A young lady is dying, or dead or perhaps just in an unpleasant little coma. She was dancing in a night club, at a party, somewhere, anyway. Suddenly she collapsed, fainted, fell. She is now in her grave, in a hospital, under an oxygen tent. It was her dress, brand new. Some poison, mysterious strange poison from the dress struck her down.

Where did she buy the dress? Oh, some store on F street, Fourteenth street, G street, Seventh street, Thirteenth street, Twelfth street. It was said she purchased a dress which someone else had returned, that this customer had died, that the corpse had worn the dress, that a noxious gas from the corpse had lingered on the dress, bringing death, illness, coma., to its second purchaser.

Who was this girl? Why didn't you know she was a secretary in the State Department, a file clerk in the AAA, typist in the Interior Department, stenographer in the HOLC. What was her name? Can't remember. Lois, Mary, Louise, Gwendolyn, Catherine, June, May, April, Lucille, or something like that.

That's the story.

Reporters have checked every store, every hospital, morgue, undertaker. What did they find out?

There was no corpse.
No sick girl.
No dance.
No dress.
No poison.
No collapse.
Nothing . . .

200-Pound Burglar Routed From Home By Unarmed Wife

A 200-pound burglar, armed with a pistol last night was routed by an unarmed woman, Mrs. Marion B. Meekins, of 1625 Sixteenth street northwest.

Mrs. Meekins surprised the man as he was ransacking her fourth-floor apartment. Undaunted by his display of a pistol, she gave battle to the intruder.

The man, whom Mrs. Meekins described as being well-dressed, beat a hasty retreat. He took with him a diamond ring and two bar pins valued at several hundred dollars.

Job Injury Law Violators Here Warned

Produce Dealer Receives Suspended Sentence; Pays Employe.

Following a Washington business man's conviction in Police Court on charges of violating the District Workmen's Compensation act, Col. Z. Lewis Dalby, general counsel of the United States Employes' Compensation Commission, yesterday renewed his warning to local employers that further violations "will not be tolerated."

Under District laws, Col. Dalby explained, every employer in the city, with certain exceptions, is required to secure accident insurance for his or her employes. A number of cases where business concerns have failed to comply with the law are now under investigation, he added.

Pending since October 5, charges against Nick Cladis, a produce dealer, were disposed of in Police Court yesterday when he was given a suspended sentence of 365 days in jail by Judge Walter J. Casey.

Cladis, it was testified, failed to secure employes' insurance under District laws and as a consequence was unable to pay a claim filed by one of his workers injured during working hours.

After repeated continuances, Cladis' case was called before Judge Casey yesterday. The defendant changed his plea from not guilty to guilty. When he agreed to pay his employe $240, the amount awarded by adjustment officers of the commission, the court accepted an appeal for leniency and suspended sentence.

The employe, Aaron Singleton, was burned severely in 1935 when a produce truck on which he was working for Cladis caught fire. Cladis also agreed to pay the injured man's hospital and physician's fees.

"We are going after these compensation law violators," Col. Dalby declared. "We are going to put them in jail rather than agree to nominal fines for their offenses. This law is not to be trifled with."

G. W. Eleven, Wary of Wake Forest, Is 7-5 Favorite Tonight

Fleet Backs Of Deacons Feared

Standing on the threshold of newfound glory, George Washington's potent gridmen meet up with the demon Deacons of Wake Forest tonight at Griffith Stadium in a game that may change the entire complexion of the Colonials' campaign. The kick-off is scheduled for 8 o'clock.

Victorious in three of four games and defeated only by North Carolina's power house in their debut, the Deacons will swing into action a slight underdog in betting. Colonial supporters were offering 7 to 5 last night and had plenty of takers.

Triumphant over George Washington last season by a 7-6 margin in one of the season's biggest surprises, and barely nosed out by the District eleven two years ago, 6 to 2, Wake Forest has come to be recognized by G. W. as a major foe.

Light, But Good.

The Deacons are exceptionally light, especially in the line which averages only 177 pounds, but weight, or the lack of, seems to be the least of their worries, if those games with Carolina, Clemson, and other beefier foes are criterions. Biggest man in the line is Joe Swan, 224-pound right tackle who distinguished himself by a vicious brand of play in the four previous games.

Outstanding in the backfield are "Hobo" Daniel, 190-pound fullback and kicking star; Walter Kitchin, ace pass thrower, and Hal Warren, 153-pound scat-back who could almost slip through a butterfly net. Warren probably will start the game, while Kitchin sits on the bench sizing up George Washington's defense, picking out flaws that may pave the way for a touchdown pass. His passing has figured importantly in all of the team's victories.

Tihila at Halfback.

One change has been made in George Washington's line-up, "Nig" Tihila going to right halfback, a position shared by Frank Merka and Herb Reeves in previous games. Tihila was so impressive in practice this week the coaches had no alternative in choosing a man for the position.

A Junior Colonal League game, involving the Merrick and Washington Boys Club teams, will be played at 7 o'clock.

The line-ups:

G. W. U.	Position.	Wake Forest.
(31) Holt	L.E.	Shore (20)
(32) Prather	L.T.	Beaver (63)
(46) Cottingham	L.G.	Souther (62)

The Navy Lends a Hand To Gaels for Rams Tilt

New York, Oct. 22 (AP).—If Slip Madigan's St. Mary's football team doesn't beat Fordham here Saturday, it won't be because he didn't get the support of the United States Navy.

Madigan needed a scout to watch Fordham in its early games. San Francisco and New York weren't very close together and he didn't want to spare one of his coaches for several weeks. So he asked Toby Hunt, captain and tackle of the 1931 St. Mary's team, and now in the United States Navy Aviation Corps in Brooklyn to do the job.

Hunt got permission to get away, and that's how Slip learned about the Rams.

Football Seen Racket; 'Pro' Colleges Listed

By the United Press.

New York, Oct. 22.—Charging that football at most colleges is an out and out racket, John R. Tunis, prominent sports writer, appealed today in an article in the American Mercury, to schools to cut their players in on the profits and bring football into the open.

Tunis said that Yale, by agreeing to sell exclusive rights to its football broadcasting, "has definitely taken a far-reaching step. At last we have an old-established university admitting openly what long has been a fact; that college football is a racket. Yale intends to get her cut. A great educational institution finally is calling a spade a spade—and a football a golden egg."

"The next step," he said, "obviously is an avowed cash payment to athletes to furnish the spectacle by which the Atlantic Refining Co. can afford to hand over $20,000 to the Yale Athletic Association. Perhaps this is at last the end of hypocrisy, the end of professional teams posing as amateurs, the end of the vast American racket of shamateur college sports . . . the colleges frankly are out for the dough."

Tunis classified 100 colleges, "catalogued according to their practices in modern athletics . . . It is difficult to make the classification absolutely accurate, for the same reason that it is difficult to procure real information concerning actual conditions in Russia, Italy or Germany . . . The colleges . . . conceal, they do not reveal."

Under Group A, "the amateurs," he listed: Alleghany, Bowdoin, Brown, California Tech, Centre, Chicago, City College of New York, Colby, Gettysburg, Hamilton, Haverford, Hobart, Johns Hopkins, Kenyon, Knox, Lehigh, Williams, Maine, Middlebury, Oberlin, Occidental, Pomona, Rochester, Rutgers, Sewanee, Swarthmore, Trinity, Tufts, Union, Ursinus, Virginia, Wesleyan and William and Mary.

Under Group B, "the semipros," he listed: Amherst, Boston University, Army, California, Cincinnati, Cornell, Dartmouth, Harvard, Illinois, Iowa, Kentucky, Lafayette, Maryland, Michigan, Navy, N. Y. U., Notre Dame, Pennsylvania, Penn State, Purdue, Rollins, Tennessee, Texas, Vanderbilt, W. and J., and Yale.

Under Group C, "the professionals," he listed: Alabama, Baylor, Boston College, Bucknell, Carnegie Tech, Colgate, Columbia, Detroit, Duke, Duquesne, Fordham, Georgetown, Georgia, Kansas, Louisiana State, Marquette, Michigan State, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, North Carolina, Northwestern, Ohio State, Oregon, Pittsburgh, Princeton, Santa Clara, St. Mary's, Southern California, Southern Methodist, Stanford, Syracuse, Temple, Texas Christian, Tulane, Villanova, Worcester Polytechnic Institute, Washington, Western Maryland, West Virginia and Wisconsin.

2 Hoya Stars Won't Start N.Y.U. Tilt

With two of its brightest stars, Jack Fleming and Joe Keegin, nursing minor injuries that will keep them out of the starting lineup and possibly out of the entire game, Georgetown's undefeated and unscored-on gridmen will leave this morning for New York. Tomorrow they play New York University at Yankee Stadium in a game that will vie with the Fordham-St. Mary's battle for patronage.

Fleming, after recovering from a sprained ankle, injured in the Bucknell game last week, slipped and fell down a flight of concrete steps leading to the dressing room after yesterday's practice. He injured the same ankle, and although Trainer Harry Crowley optimistically believes he will have the boy ready to play, Coach Jack Hagerty fears the worst.

Keegin's injured hip has not responded to treatment as well as hoped and he is definitely out of the starting line-up. The injury is not serious but painful. Bob Nolan, erstwhile quarterback, will replace him.

To Use Wide-Open Play.

Otherwise the Hoyas are ready for their first major test of the season. A 14-13 scuffle with North Carolina last week, lost by the inability to convert after a touchdown was the Violet's answer to the critics who said its football fortunes were on the decline. Coach Mal Stevens' men are fully recovered from their opening-game shellacking at Ohio State's hands and must be reckoned with the top-flight teams.

Georgetown will play a wide-open brand of football tomorrow if weather conditions permit. Tommy Keating, its brainy little field general and all-American candidate will be on the dispatching end of laterals and forwards, and anybody but a coach probably will be on the receiving end. The Hoyas have a reputation in New York as one of the passingest teams in the East, and they intend to live up to it to the fullest extent.

Math Prof Claims Foolproof Way To Win on Races

New York, Oct. 22.—Aaron Bakst, mathematics instructor at Columbia University, said today he had invented a fool-proof formula for beating the races, but refused to reveal it because he doesn't believe in gambling.

"It is based on the fact that bookies don't lay odds scientifically," he said. "In many races their odds on the various horses are such that by placing bets of different amounts on each horse, as indicated by the formula, the bettor is mathematically sure to win, no matter which horse comes in."

He said he had tried it out by making imaginary bets on 1,000 races and had won.

Bergman Sees Victory Over Ole Miss

Knoxville, Tenn., Oct. 22.—Catholic University's football squad paused here this afternoon after completing the first leg of its trip to Oxford, Miss., where tomorrow it tangles with the "Rebels" in one of the day's most attractive intersectional battles.

The team established temporary headquarters at the Andrew Jackson Hotel, where Coach "Dutch" Bergman held a brief blackboard drill before proceeding to the University of Tennessee Stadium for a two-hour workout.

Dinner was served at the Andrew Jackson and at 7:55 p. m. the team entrained for Memphis, where it is scheduled to work out again tomorrow. Bergman is satisfied with the spirit and condition of the squad and today predicted a Catholic University verdict after one of "the toughest games we've ever had."

Gaels' Eleven Rated Over Fordham

Team May Be Best He Had, Madigan Says, Despite Tie Game.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Oct. 22.—Jovial Slip Madigan, boasting a new pink shirt and tie to match, an undefeated St. Mary's football team, and 200 of the happiest fans of the season, rolled into town today for his annual battle with Fordham Saturday at the Polo Grounds.

"I think this team has a chance to be the best I've ever had," Slip announced, without offering the slightest alibi for the fact the Gaels were held to a scoreless tie by San Francisco last Sunday.

"I'm not making any predictions that we will win Saturday. My scouts tell me Fordham has the finest tackling team they've seen all year."

With both teams undefeated, the Ram-Gael game is the headliner on the metropolitan slate. It may draw upward of 50,000 spectators. St. Mary's holds a 3-1 edge in the series and is rated the favorite.

No Scrimmages.

Besieged by friends, Madigan spent the morning at a midtown hotel, joined his team at Westchester Country Club in Rye, N. Y., for practice this afternoon, and returned to Manhattan tonight for a radio broadcast and a party to newspapermen. The squad will not come into the city until game time Saturday.

"This is an amazing team," Slip commented. "We haven't scrimmaged in practice since September 30. I don't like the look of things. They may be abolishing scrimmage any day now, the way things look. You know, they talked me into getting silk suits for my outfit this year—pants and jerseys and stockings—everything but the headgear."

Groux is one of the two St. Mary's players on the injured list. He is temporarily out with a bad leg, but is expected to be ready by Saturday. The other is Floyd Maxham, regular fullback, who has a torn muscle in his back and is not expected to play against Fordham.

Deal On for Browns' Sale, Harridge Says

By the Associated Press.

St. Louis, Oct. 22.—For the second time since Phil Ball's death in October, 1933, persistent reports of negotiations for the purchase of the St. Louis Browns had some foundation in fact today.

"A deal is on," President Will Harridge, of the American League, told the Post-Dispatch over the telephone from Chicago. He said he did not know who the negotiators were.

The newspaper identified them as a group of St. Louisans, including Donald L. Barnes, president of the American Investment Co., and William O. De Witt, treasurer of the National League St. Louis Cardinals.

Several Prospects.

George Sisler, one-time star first baseman and manager of the Browns, headed a syndicate that made an unsuccessful attempt to deal for the club a year ago. Sisler said he knew nothing about the present negotiations.

The Browns, the league's "problem child" since Ball's death, have been directed the past two seasons by the executors of his estate. This situation has aroused dissatisfaction among other club owners, who feel executors of an estate, governed by legal requirements of safety in their investments, cannot take the risk involved in making adequate expenditures to bolster the team.

Louis B. Von Weise, president of the Browns and one of the Ball estate executors, had said on numerous occasions, the last time only several weeks ago in St. Louis, that the club was for sale. In New York today he admitted there were "several prospective buyers" but denied anything definite had been done.

Price Is $350,000.

The Post-Dispatch, however, asserted the "ironing out" of details was all that was delaying consummation of the deal, which it said involved the club's franchise and players, but not Sportsman's Park, for a price of "about $350,000."

In its story of the purchase plans, the newspaper also disclosed there was a basis for another persistent rumor—that of dissension between the executors and Rogers Hornsby, manager of the team. It is said the executors tried unsuccessfully before Baseball Commissioner Kenesaw M. Landis to break Hornsby's contract, which has two years to run.

The would-be purchasers of the Browns, however, were said to regard Hornsby as an "asset" and plan to retain him as manager.

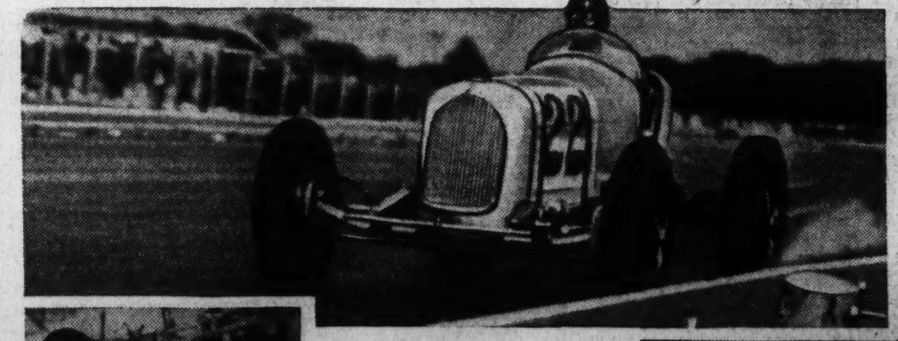
AT THE VANDERBILT CUP RACE—

72% VOTE FOR VINTAGE TOBACCO'S FLAVOR

ROOSEVELT RACEWAY, Long Island, N. Y., Oct. 12—Roaring motors ...singing speed—and while 45 trim racing cars flashed past, 172 men made the taste test. By a large majority, they preferred the flavor of Vintage tobacco.

We picked smokers at random from the crowd . . . gave each two unidentified cigars—a Vintage White Owl and another, representing the leading nationally advertised brands. No names or familiar bands . . . not a thing to prejudice the smokers . . . Taste alone counted. Each man smoked both . . . indicated the one he liked best. 72% preferred Vintage White Owl's mildness.



SPEED MERCHANTS . . . had their day. But there was a lot more than speed involved on the tricky loops and curves of the Roosevelt Raceway. Skillful driving won on the track—and better taste won up in the stands. White Owl's Vintage flavor scored another victory.

● No one field can always produce choice tobacco. In a Vintage year, the leaf is richer, more full-bodied. In our really mild White Owl Cigar, we use only tobacco of Vintage quality. That means special buying.

● White Owl's Crop Inspection System, the only known organization of its kind, keeps a check on growing conditions in the finest filler-tobacco districts in America. We know where Vintage tobacco is maturing and buy the best of it for White Owl.

● Aging by nature!... an average of three years. No economical short cuts... no unnatural processes. Vintage tobacco tastes good in its natural state—doesn't need artificial treatment.

Chilean Army Team Leads U.S. in Inter-American Horse Show

Mishap Costs U. S. Group Its Lead

By Bill McCormick.

A slip on treacherously hard turf of the Meadowbrook course cost the United States Army team the chance of leading in the international team jumping as the four-day Inter-American Horse Show opened yesterday and the day's activities were concluded with the Chilean Army team in first place by a narrow margin.

With two perfect performances over the 15-jump international course, the Chileans wound up the day with but eight faults scored against them. A mere fledgling at the hoss business, one Lieut. J. O. Curtis contributed a faultless performance for the United States, which aided and abetted his teammates in finishing with only 3½ more faults than the leaders from South America.

Largely because Lieut. Francisco de la Rosa became confused and lost his course with only four jumps to complete a perfect performance, the Mexican Army team, a green outfit of which much was expected, wound up with the staggering total of 31½ points, which practically eliminates the cousins from below the Rio Grande.

The downfall of the United States team, which may not prove serious in the three-day competition in which the winner will be determined by aggregate score, came about as Maj. J. T. Cole, captain of this country's representatives, was well on the way to a perfect completion of the hazardous course.

Wheeling to attack the last three jumps—which were mere trifles compared to some that he had just navigated successfully—Cole's mount, the fractious Dakota, slipped to the turf. The horse's hip did not touch the ground, therefore the fall was officially classified as the unseating of a rider rather than fall of horse and man. The classification meant that Cole was penalized 10 points instead of 6.

As though that wasn't bad enough, the stirrup strap on Dakota automatically came loose as Cole shoved out his foot to keep it from being crushed—and that consumed time in the event in which one-quarter fault is charged for every second consumed over the maximum of 1 minute and 25 seconds. All in all, Maj. Cole wound up with 19¾ penalties against him instead of the big zero that might have been his except for the mishap.

Chileans Superb.

Thus it became necessary to toss Cole's performance out when it came time to figure up the team's standings, which are based on the best three out of four rides. Capt. M. H. Matteson, with eight faults, and Lieut. R. W. Curtis, who scored three faults for the only refusal of the day and one-half fault for over time, contributed to the big goose egg already hung up by Lieut. J. O. Curtis to account for the United States team's 11½ points.

The Chileans are not to be denied their laurels, by any means. Seasoned riders with the best of horse flesh under them, they covered the ground and sailed over the many difficult obstacles with military neatness and dispatch, to provide competition for any man's group of horsemen.

Lieut. Luis Perez handled Xysme, a British-bred horse, over the course in a well-nigh faultless manner to provide perhaps the best and most inspiring bit of co-operation between horse and man of the day. He scored no faults and completed the course in the lowest time of the day—requiring only 1 minute and 15 seconds to finish.

Lieut. Pelayo Izurrieta contributed another inspiring ride to the afternoon's entertainment. He guided Tonada over the 15 jumps without a fault. Capt. Eduardo Yanez, leader of the Chilean team, was unable to get Chilena over the Aiken and another timber obstacle without knockdown, thus scoring eight faults.

Lieut. Rafael Monitti on Toqui crashed through the brick wall jump and knocked down a timber to account for eight faults.

The international team jumping will not be held today, but will be resumed tomorrow and brought to a conclusion Sunday. The highlight of today's exhibition probably will be the international individual military jumping, which is open to officers of any nation. It is a one-day affair.

W. Carlton Eacho, an excellent horse, was the first to attempt the difficult course in the Hunter class, which opened the real action. Eacho also was the first to bite the dust as he was dismounted on the second jump. Mrs. John Hay Whitney made almost a clean sweep for her Llangollen Stables in this class, riding to the blue on Spring Hope, winning second with Cypress Des Beaux and fourth with Two Leggins, Spring Miss, owned by the Ritticor Brothers, was awarded the yellow.

Maryland Team Leads.

The crack Maryland team, greatly aided by a well-nigh perfect performance by Fenton Fadeley on his Lacquer Lady, led after the first day's competition of the interstate civilian team jumping. Maryland scored but 21 faults to 25½ for Virginian and 28½ for the District of Columbia aggregation. The competition is based on three days of contesting, with aggregate score at the finish to determine the winner. Therefore, none of the teams is far from striking distance of the final prize, which will be settled Saturday.

Much pomp and circumstance surrounded the entire show. The proceedings opened with a colorful ceremony in which an Army bugler sounded a call, which was answered by the Third Cavalry Mounted Band, which entered the ring followed by a squad of four grays, whose riders bore the standards of the Third Cavalry and the United States. Behind the color guard came the Tenth Cavalry Machine Gun Troop with banners flying. Everyone stood at attention as the musicians musicked "Dixie," and the show was on.

Homesick Baer Abandons His Comeback

Fighter Leaves for Home After Toronto Fiasco; Tour Cut Short.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Oct. 22.—No more chin pounding for Max Baer in his comeback campaign until after the first of the year, and perhaps not even then.

The impression prevails the Californian never will attempt to regain the world's heavyweight championship which he lost to James J. Braddock a year ago.

On the plea that he was homesick to see his family after an absence of three months, Baer, his brother, Buddy, and Manager Ancil Hoffman today were on their way back to California, headed for Hoffman's ranch near Fair Oaks. Behind them they left Trainer Izzie Kline to offer explanations.

"Max is homesick," Kline said, "so the tour was cut short."

Baer's tour ended suddenly in a fiasco in Toronto last Monday night. The tour, at least so far as exploitation for the former champion's comeback campaign was concerned, was no howling success. It was financially successful in spots, but the former champion encountered a lot of rough spots.

Landon Prep Elevens Lose Pair of Contests

Landon Prep football teams lost two games yesterday, the Junior Varsity dropping a 7-0 decision to Episcopal High's third team and the 90-pound eleven falling before St. Alban's, 26 to 0.

Episcopal scored its winning touchdown after a sustained march with Louch, right halfback, going over for the score from the 10-yard line, Sibley's place-kick was good. The game was played at Landon Field.

With Strong and Risch scoring a touchdown apiece and Skene adding two more, one on a 60-yard return of a kick-off, St. Alban's 90-pounders easily swept to victory at St. Alban's.

GRID GAME WANTED.

Washington Pros Meet Portsmouth Sunday

The Washington Pros have a man-size task coming up Sunday at Griffith Stadium, where they meet the Portsmouth Cubs, judging from the impressive list of names gracing the Cubs' roster. It looks like a roll call of All-Virginians.

Six former Virginia Poly stars, two from William and Mary; one former Virginian and one alumnus of Hampden-Sydney appear in the starting lineup. The list also includes a lad who ignored several college bids to enter business, and who is regarded as one of the best professional players in the State.

Starting time for Sunday's game has been moved back a half hour to 3 p. m. The same admission prices of 55 cents for adults and 25 cents for children will prevail.

Woodward & Lothrop Holds Store Pin Lead

Lansburgh & Bro. held second place by taking the odd game from Jelleff, while the Hecht Co. did the same to Raleigh Haberdasher.

In other matches S. Kann Sons Co., last year's champions, swept their set from Guy-Curran & Co., while the Palais Royal took the odd game from William Hahn & Co. Good sets rolled last night were McDonald, 357; Sean, 351; Shugrue, 349; Kingsolver, 347; Henry, 343; Miller, 342; C. Aylor, 342, and Hopper, 341.

Mexican vs. Texan Marks Bout Here

Joe Rivers, from across the border, will meet Cowboy Howard Scott, of Texas, in a scheduled ten-rounder in which Rivers will be seeking to remove from his record the blot of a victory scored over him by Scott last spring in a Washington ring.

Scott started his climb to local boxing fame by beating Rivers who had previously fought to thrilling bouts with Petey Sarron and knocked out Mike Belloise, recognized in New York as the featherweight champion of the world.

Thompson Will Tangle With Gevinson, Nov. 4

A red-headed prodigal son will return to the roped fold at Turner's arena, when Steve Thompson, local welterweight star meets his first opponent after a six-month layoff in a headline bout on the Farewell-to-Lou Gevinson card put on by the National Guard November 4.

The Southwest boy, who, though rarely above 147 pounds, does most of his campaigning in the middleweight class. He seemed headed for a brilliant season when he decisively outpointed Jay Turner in the District of Columbia Golden Gloves competition last February; but with one of the many left hooks which he threw at Turner's head, Steve broke a finger which kept him from entering the finals of the tournament, and forced him into the long period on the shelf.

Pittsburgh Finishes Hard Work for Irish

Pittsburgh, Oct. 22 (AP).—The University of Pittsburgh's Golden Panthers had their last hard drill today in preparation for their meeting Saturday with the undefeated Irish of Notre Dame.

Terps Perfect Offense for Syracuse

Dobson Fears Team May Tend to Let Guckeyson Win the Game.

Taking things easily after Wednesday's long and revealing scrimmage against George Washington, Maryland's squad yesterday confined its efforts to perfecting battle formations to be used against Syracuse Saturday.

Sensing that a "let George do it" attitude might creep over the squad regarding Bill Guckeyson, the Terps' All-American halfback candidate who is at his peak, Coach Frank Dobson warned his men that whipping Syracuse "will be an eleven-man job," pointing out that the Orange hopes to regain some of its lost prestige by an upset victory.

Guckeyson will bear the brunt of the attack, doing a large share of ball carrying, most of the passing and at least half of the kicking. "Jumbo Jim" Meade, sensational sophomore halfback, may help out with the punting. Against Virginia he averaged better than 40 yards and his timing and placements were above reproach.

Vic Willis, towering left end, undoubtedly will be the target for the majority of Guckeyson's passes. Willis and Blair Smith, at the other wing, also are key men in the defense which has been carefully prepared to trap Vanny Albanese, Syracuse's ace back. All of this afternoon's practice will be devoted to perfecting defensive measures planned for the game.

Maryland is scheduled to leave for the battle front tonight at 7 o'clock. Coach Frank Dobson will lead a delegation of 30 men into the upper New York City. The squad is to leave for College Park immediately after the game, arriving home early Sunday morning.

You can still Feel Young at 60

Authorities find some men "old" at 30 or 40. Yet thousands still enjoy physical and mental vigor at 60 and 70.

Sensible living's the answer—day-by-day care in the choice of diet, regular exercise, sane relaxation. Look ahead. Give your body a "break"... And, if you drink, choose a whiskey that AGREES with you.

Whiskey-kindness can't be seen or touched or tasted. Yet—if you want whiskey that agrees with you—kindness is as essential as fine taste. And complete enjoyment demands it. How can you find it?

To provide you with a reliable guide, the House of Seagram commissioned a group of trained, impartial research men to answer the vital question: "How does the human system respond to different forms of whiskey?"

Translated into simple terms, the technical reports of their exhaustive effort showed conclusively that Seagram's Crowns, blended the special Seagram way, were a genuinely kind form of whiskey—"A MOST WHOLESOME FORM OF WHISKEY".

Already, hundreds of thousands of sensible, moderate men have learned to rely upon this verdict as a sure guide—to both whiskey-kindness and fine, rich whiskey taste. Choose Seagram's Crown Whiskies at the bar, and serve them to your guests at home. They pay pleasure-dividends.

Finance, at 3-1, Wins Laurel Feature by Neck From Brown Top

3 DeCamillis Mounts Are Winners

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

Laurel, Md., Oct. 22.—Hanging on with determination, Finance, a gelded son of Bull Dog, survived a blanket finish to win the Grade "A" Handicap, which featured today's program of the Maryland Fair, Inc. The Denemark Stable colt won by a neck from Cary T. Grayson's Brown Top. Mrs. R. H. Heighe's Zay was third and the Maemere Farm's Mantagna fourth and last. The distance between Finance's head and the tip of Mantagna's tail was less than two lengths.

The four raced in close-up Indian file to the far turn with Finance ahead, and Zay, Brown Top and Mantagna in order. Entering the stretch, Jockey Charlie Kurtsinger gave Finance a breathing spell while saving ground. Zay and Brown Top pulled up until the three appeared to be hauling a chariot.

In the stretch, Kurtsinger resumed driving and Finance slowly drew out to the slight margin he held at the end. Zay lacked punch in the last 20 yards and surrendered second money to Brown Top by a head. Despite frantic punishment dealt by Jockey Westrope, Mantagna could not get into the main fight.

Heavy play appeared for all the four and Finance paid an $8.10 mutuel. He was clocked in 1:45 3-5 for the mile and a sixteenth.

The day brought a suspension for the remainder of the meeting to Jockey Harry Richards, scheduled to ride Pompoon in the New England Futurity, for rough riding on Top Dog in the third race.

Deepwick, a first-time starter, owned by P. M. Ryan, defeated a field of a dozen maiden colts and geldings in the opening race on today's program at this track.

A "good thing" in the betting, Deepwick was excellently handled by Jockey E. DeCamillis and paid a $10.80 mutuel. The Westiwick gelding led Leo J. Marks' Marfeu to the wire by three parts of a length with E. Coates' Clarion Call third and four lengths farther back. The winner was clocked in 1:07 4-5 for the 5½ furlongs. The usual midweek crowd of 9,000 saw the program begin under cloudless skies and over a fast track.

Spills Mark Chase.

The day's steeplechase event brought a series of thrills and a victory for The Blackguard, running in the interests of Louis R. Stuyvesant. A field of ten marched postward and only half of that number reached the finish line. Two spectacular spills, two lost riders and one run-out marked the 2-mile contest.

Sunny Thoughts, which went to the final jump in front, crashed and gave The Blackguard a 10-length victory over Sunny Lassie. Long Shot, which seemed headed for a place in the money, went tumbling at the thirteenth fence, and Bell Man, of the Adams entry, took third money because he was still on his hoofs. Millican and Law Breaker, the latter heavily played, lost their riders, while Ruth Wrack put herself out of action by running into the infield the first time around.

Jockey G. Walker was rushed to the hospital after the steeplechase, believed to be suffering from a fractured skull. His mount, Long Shot, fell during the race.

The Glen Riddle Farm's Army and Navy, a recent graduate from the maiden ranks, won the third race in a blanket finish that called the camera into action. Second money went to Mrs. L. Viau's Conquer with Mr. Bun, half of the Sokol entry, third in the field of nine.

Army and Navy, outrun for a half, was sent to the outside for racing room and came with a rush that could not be denied. The winner was Jockey DeCamillis' second of the day and he completed the $333.70 daily double which he began with Deepwick in the first race. Army and Navy ran the mile and a sixteenth in 1:46 and paid a personal mutuel of $18.30.

Night Cap Wins at 8-1.

Jockey DeCamillis rode his third winner of the day in as many mounts by taking the sixth event with A. W. Abbott's Night Cap at an $18.60 mutuel. Silent Shot was second and Two Bob third in the field of seven. Night Cap ran Malbrouk into defeat and they held sway to the wire, running the mile and a sixteenth in 1:45 2-5.

E. R. Bradley's Biologist skimmed the rail on the swing for the stretch and emerged in front to stay in the fourth race. Ridden by Jockey Joe Renick, the colt had a two-length advantage over Mrs. E. Denemark's Prairie Dog with Mrs. Walter M. Jefford's Golden Era third. Biologist ran the 6 furlongs in 1:12 4-5 and paid an $8.30 mutuel.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—DEEPWICK, $10.80, $7.70, $6.70; MARFEU, $6.20, $4.30; CLARION CALL, $14.70.

DEEPWICK, away first, was steadied when outrun by MATCH PLATE going to the first turn, took command on the swing for the stretch and was put to intermittent punishment to withstand closing rush of MARFEU. The latter, forwardly placed from the beginning, gained gradually and was wearing down the winner at the end. CLARION CALL was forced to race wide most of the way and closed gamely. MATCH PLATE tired after being rushed to the front. HYPO broke well, dropped back, and faltered after moving up on the inside. ZEBAR had early speed. MAEBOB was away in a tangle.

SECOND RACE—About two miles. Purse, $1,000; steeplecase. For maiden 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won easily; place, same. Went to post at 2:00. Off at 2:01. Winner, L. R. Two-dollar mutuels paid—THE BLACKGUARD, $7.70, $4.00, $3.80; SUNNY LASSIE, $20.70, $9.60; BELL MAN (entry), $8.20.

THE BLACKGUARD forced the pace of LONG SHOT from the start, took the lead approaching the eighth fence, was displaced by SUNNY THOUGHTS nearing the fourteenth fence, regained lead when that one fell and was being eased up at the end. SUNNY LASSIE went evenly and was eased in the closing stages. BELL MAN lacked speed throughout. LAW BREAKER made a mild bid the second time around and tired. ROLLING STEEL was a distant trailer. WILFRID G. lost rider at the sixth fence. RUTH WRACK ran out at the fourth fence. MILLICAN lost rider at the tenth. LONG SHOT set a brisk pace and was faltering when he fell at the thirteenth fence. SUNNY THOUGHTS, within striking distance of the leaders from the start, moved to the outside when placed to a drive and had taken command when he fell at the fourteenth jump.

ARMY AND NAVY, allowed to settle into best stride, was sent to the outside for racing room entering the stretch and rallied willingly to punishment to be up in the concluding strides. CONQUER, close to the pacemakers from the beginning, moved up sharply to take command midway of the stretch and continued gamely, but was unable to resist the winner. MR. BUN improved his position along the backstretch and closed with good energy. MISS CAREFUL saved ground entering the stretch to loom menacingly, but faltered in the final sixteenth. TOP DOG was used up setting the early pace and tired badly. The others were outrun.

Resuming a football rivalry stretching back to 1892, the Light Blue of Eastern High faces the Navy Blue of Central today in Central Stadium in the forty-first inter-high series game between the two schools.

A perennial thorn in the side of favored Central teams, Eastern enters today's encounter in its usual status as the underdog, a familiar rating for the Light Blue. Of the past 11 games between the two schools, Eastern has won six, Central four, and one was a tie. Eastern's victories in most cases were surprising upsets.

With this dangerous reputation, an Eastern team packing plenty of punch, embarks from the Northeast section early this afternoon all set to knock Central off its inter-high championship perch. Both teams enter the game with three victories in four starts. Fork Union Military Academy stopped Central, 7 to 0, and a powerful Episcopal High eleven defeated Eastern, 14 to 6.

Eastern Line Heavier.

Neither defeat gave the losers anything to weep about, Fork Union and Episcopal being two of the best prep school teams in Virginia. An addtional incentive for an Eastern victory is the fact that Coach Hardy Pearce of Eastern did considerable coaching at Eastern about two years ago.

Another incentive is the history of the grid series between the schools which shows 31 wins for Central and 9 for Eastern, but the Lincoln Parkers have taken decisive steps in the past dozen years to even the account.

Surprising most observers, Coach Artie Boyd of Eastern yesterday announced a line averaging 182 pounds. According to the Central figures, the Central line will be outweighed 4 pounds per man. The Central backfield will average 164 to 154 for Eastern, however.

The Eastern ball-carrying corps will have little to apologize for, being probably the ablest in point of numbers in inter-high ranks.

Helen Dettweiler Bows in Texas Golf

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Fort Worth, Tex., Oct. 22.—Edna Saenger, of Shreveport, La., today ended the championship aspirations of 21-year-old Helen Dettweiler, of Washington, D. C., in the quarter-finals of the Texas women's open golf tournament. Miss Spencer won, 3 and 2, after being 3 down to Miss Dettweiler at the end of six holes. Starting with the seventh, the Louisiana girl won five straight holes.

Maj. Miller Is Named Boxing Ratings Cheif

Maj. Harvey L. (Heinie) Miller, secretary of the District of Columbia Boxing Commission, has been named chairman of the championship committee of the National Boxing Association. He was appointed by President Joseph Maloney, of the N. B. A.

The committee releases national ratings of boxers quarterly, and thus all future releases will emanate from Maj. Miller's Washington office.

Cracking down on procrastinators, the District Boxing Commission yesterday adopted a resolution to impose a fine of $5 on boxers failing to appear promptly at 2 p. m. for weighing in and physical examinations.

"This resolution is for the protection of the boxing public in order that sufficient time be allowed to obtain a substitute in the case of a contestant failing to pass the physical examination," Secretary Miller declared.

Gallaudet Sees Victory Over W. & M. Saturday

Fully recovered from its setback it received at Bridgewater in the opening game of the season, Gallaudet's eleven will finish up preparations for its first home game of the season with William and Mary, Norfolk Branch, tomorrow at Kendall Green.

Capt. Norman Brown will lead a team into action that has all of the old Gallaudet spirit and much of the new strategy of the game, and the boys in Blue are counting on bagging their first victory of the season.

Smithsonian Unable To Accept El Lagarto

No resting place in the Smithsonian Institution's museum awaits the famous El Lagarto, winner of the Gold Cup and President's Cup regattas in the past decade.

Because of lack of space, the offer of El Lagarto's owner, George Reis, of Bolton Landing, N. Y., to place his noted powerboat racer near the site of the annual President's Cup regatta could not be accepted by the Department of Arts and Industries.

Hockey Palace Gets Another Setback

By Robert Garricon.

Ice hockey, long a desired addition to the District's entertainment cosmos and on its way in the form of an ice arena being built here, has suffered another set-back once more and will be conspicuous by its absence this winter.

Publicized plans last spring for the construction of an ice palace on Wisconsin avenue just south of M street by Joseph Cambria, Baltimore Laundry owner, had raised hopes that Washington would, at last, be able to offer the popular attraction this season. But it seems that the jinx, which has held up the invasion of the sport thus far, is still doing its darndest to once more repel its entrance.

Planning to succeed where several other groups had failed, Cambria actually purchased a site and began to lay plans for the building of the house that would at last bring the speedy game, as well as pleasure skating for the citizenry, to the fast growing aggregation of local enthusiasts. But while the intentions were good, the progress was slow.

To date, only the clearing for the foundation has been made ready. Being only a few yards from the water of the old B. & O. Canal, it was necessary to consult engineers on the danger of building too near the water. This took much time and when several other problems, seating capacity and arrangement, framework, etc., had been settled, time had completely overhauled them.

Now, Cambria claims, this has been done and though he won't be able to open in November as had been planned, there will be some ice hockey here late in the winter

Also the owner of a chain of professional baseball clubs, Cambria visualized big things for Washington and his project, even having gone so far as to secure the sixth franchise in the classy Eastern Amateur Hockey League, which has been functioned with five clubs in the past. Failure to make the opening of the league will not mean forfeiture of the franchise, but will merely mean they will have to await the beginning of the second half before entering the competition.

Promising a definite announcement within a week, Cambria and his group now stand the best chance of conquering the procrastination malady which for so long a time has kept the Capital hockey fans on the gallop to Baltimore for their amusement.

Clemson Eleven Mixes Passes, Runs, Beats South Carolina, 19-0

By the Associated Press.

Columbia, S. C., Oct. 22.—Clemson scored twice in the second quarter and again in the final minutes of the fourth period to defeat the University of South Carolina, 19 to 0, in their annual State Fair football classic before 18,000 persons today.

Joe Berry rifled an 18-yard pass to Sam McConnell on the 9-yard stripe shortly after the second period began. Berry hit the line for four, and then Mac Folger plowed through for a touchdown. McConnell's try for point failed. Berry took a Gamecock punt on his 27, and tore off 45 yards.

Another pass, Berry to McConnell, put the ball in scoring distance. Berry slashed off right tackle to the 1-foot line, and again Folger bucked over. Pearson kicked the extra point.

The Tigers repulsed a Gamecock threat on their 10-yard line early in the last quarter by holding Urbanyi to a 1-yard gain on fourth down when he needed three.

Olson Is Victor In Rough Bout With Dusek

Cliff Olson, the swinging Swede, won on a disqualification from Ernie Dusek after 35 minutes of the bitterest brawling seen on a wrestling mat in many a day at Turner's Arena last night.

The match set an even higher standard of action than their previous encounter, won by Dusek and leaves practically no alternative but another meeting between the two.

For almost the entire 35 minutes they were in the ring, the two hellish heavyweights kept the 2,000 customers on their feet, thereby making for a greater profit for Promoter Joe Turner who saved considerable wears and tear on his chairs.

The finish came in true wrestling fashion, but with a new twist. Dusek was bounced off the ropes and was tearing toward Olsen in a tackle. Olson jumped up to let him pass under—a stratagem he had employed before—but Ernie turned the tables and landed a resounding thwack in the Olson midsection.

Down went Clifford and Ernie climbed on his recumbent frame to pin him. Not satisfied with pinning him, he started kicking him—and Refereee Bennah Bortnick immediately disqualified Ernie.

Matres Kirilenko defeated Hank Barber in 19 minutes in a semifinal. Hank clanked his noggin against one of the ring posts in a bit of flying about, and was unable to continue.

Wilson, Gonzaga, Roosevelt Picked to Win Games Today

Roosevelt with Bob Kollmyer should squeeze by scrappy St. John's, 14-7.

Woodrow Wilson, playing second game in the school's history, to swamp Friends School, 19 to 0, on basis of 14-0 win over St. Alban's last week.

Gonzaga High, with Jim Shaw and Jim Ellis back in the line-up, is due to hit its peak and upset Alexandria's strong George Washington eleven, 14-13, at Eastern Field, with dazzling display of wide-open football.

Georgetown Prep is going places under its new coach, Ed Hargaden. The Little Hoyas to win from the newly born St. Paul's Academy (we didn't know there was one) of Washington, 21 to 0.

Landon Prep's strongest team in years to surprise even itself by topping St. James at Hagerstown, 18 to 6.

Washington-Lee High is still smarting from the 18-14 defeat inflicted by Luray High last year. Coach Johnny Baker's boys to wreak revenge, 14-10.

National Training School, coached by Lee Carlin and Ed Crandall, former George Washington greats, meet Fredericksburg High, coached by Johnny Fenlon, former G. W. great, and will lose only after close fight. Score, 12-6.

Tomorrow.

St. Alban's to swamp Church Farms, of Philadelphia, 20 to 0.

Fisk Tire Raises Wages 11 Per Cent

Chicopee Falls, Mass., Oct. 22 (AP). Announcement was made today by C. E. Maynard, factory manager of the Fisk Rubber Corporation, of a wage increase of 11 per cent operative November 2. The increase affects 1943 factory employes and it is said will increase the company pay rolls $250,000 a year.

The United Rubber Workers had asked the company for a wage conference November 2 but the offer of today anticipates the conference.

The company at its last stockholders' meeting omitted a dividend and officers announced the more advisable policy would be to hold funds for current needs.

Clearings Rise 6.5 Per Cent Over Year Ago

Local Volume for Week Oct. 21 Shows Gain of 28.2 Per Cent.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Oct. 22.—The volume of bank clearings in the United States was heavier during the latest week.

The total for 22 leading cities, as repoted to Dun & Bradstreet, for the week ended Wednesday, October 21, was $6,018,758,000, against $5,649,897,000 a year ago, a gain of 6.5 per cent. This contrasted with a loss of 6.7 per cent in the five-day week preceding.

The decline at New York City failed to prevent an increase in the aggregate. The total at that city was $3,576,892,000, and compared with $3,626,770,000 in the similar 1935 period. The percentage loss was narrowed to 1.4, while a week earlier it was 12.0. At outside centers the amount rose to $2,441,866,000, increasing 20.7 per cent over the $2,023,127,000 in the same week of 1935.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively, A Special Correspondent.

Stocks Yield to Selling Wave in Mid-Afternoon; Franc Recovers After Break.

New York, Oct. 22.—In the first 2,000,000-share session of the week the stock market jogged along with moderate firmness until midafternoon, when a burst of selling shook down prices from 1 to 2 points in leading issues. Losses were not fully recovered at the close, although the tone improved. Government bonds were soft. December wheat closed ⅝ of a cent higher at 115 cents a bushel. Foreign exchange was quiet except for a sudden break, and subsequent recovery, in French currency, a circumstance which may have promoted the selling movement in stocks.

Stocks looked really weak only for half an hour or so, but during that period, in the fourth hour, the selling was heavy enough to set the slowly moving ticker tape a few minutes behind the floor activities. That fact probably did something to shut off trading, because as usual it acted as a signal to warn traders that they were taking risky jumps into the darkness.

Most of the selling appeared to come from small traders, probably feeling a little uncertain about their margin accounts, and from the medium-sized professional traders. The storm abated at the beginning of the third hour and some of the leaders recovered abit, among them being Steel.

Tides of Anxiety.

Foreign news was more disturbing, because of the crisis in Spain and the well-known weakness of the French position, economically and politically. For all the hullabaloo about airtight currency management, the fact remains that the world's leading currencies are drifting around, and some of them without even the guiding buoy of a balanced budget. France has the heavy government deficit, sharply rising costs of living, and the possibility any time of a conflict between the conservative and the communistic sections of the republic. The best of intentions and the best of currency management would be powerless under conditions which the securities markets here, with an election coming on, are bound to regard with at least momentary nervousness now and then.

Whatever the cause of the turn in stock market prices in late afternoon—whether the market was giving up a bit of its hopes for inflation or whether the bears were merely trying to see just how firmly held were a great many stocks already selling at 15 to 25 times earnings (on a yearly basis)—it is strikingly true that within the past two or three days a strong tide has begun to run carrying away much of the defeatist feeling of the past fortnight. Such tides come and go, as Wall Street has found during the summer, but the latest rush of Roosevelt sentiment had many earmarks of clumsy manufacture.

Betting Odds.

For one thing, the little matter of betting odds had some people fooled for a time, but all finally have learned that there has been no such animal as real Roosevelt money at 3 to 1 reflecting the guesses of the betters. For another, the Wall Street stay-at-homes were cut off in some way apparently from their usual communications with the hinterland and accepted instead the politically controlled reports on the state of mind of voters.

Elaborate attempts have been made to interpret the usually reliable straw votes as meaning to say what they did not say, but now the tendency is for such plain indications of Republican success as shown in, for instance, the Literary Digest's poll, to be given proper weight. The breakneck rush of Administration forces into Republican territory in last hour appeals to voters also indicates anything but that supreme confidence in victory which is proclaimed at campaign headquarters, where they are being firmly grasped by the bottoms and shaken so vigorously.

U. S. Steel.

Press stories of recapitalization of U. S. Steel to take care of preferred dividends are given no serious consideration in Wall Street. Whatever may have been in the back of the minds of directors some time ago, the new undistributed profits tax law doubtless has forced a plan to pay off in cash the preferred dividend arrears. The good earnings in third quarter, as compared with second quarter, encourage the belief that another good-sized cash distribution will be voted at the board meeting next Tuesday, but it is possible that the directors will wish to have a better view of the full year's earnings before deciding upon the full amount to be paid on the preferred this year. A reliable estimate of the year's net earnings is around $40,000,000.

Nobody Home.

The Secretary of the Treasury, who likes to do international acts of kindness which are unsolicited and even embarrassing, apparently was otherwise engaged this morning. He missed a chance to save the franc, which sank five full points under an avalanche of selling at a moment when the managers of the French stabilization fund apparently were having their aperitif. The French fund managers have been selling their currency all these days and probably weren't prepared for a sudden reversal. They rushed orders into the market quickly and the franc regained the full five points, settling down peacefully at the level of recent days. It was said in foreign exchange circles that the slump was caused when some holders of francs, fearing political developments at the meeting of the Radical Socialists in Paris today, found orders in the market sufficient to absorb their francs.

Airplanes.

News that the British government might buy a good many airplanes in the American market in order to supplement the supply from home factories, unable to cope with the rearmament needs, gave airplane issues a boost at the start. Some believe the airplane section already is the most overbulled of the lot, with prices, selling at lengthy distances above actual earnings. However, nothing stimulates the imagination so much as orders promised. The highest jump was made by Wright, which soon climbed more than 7 points.

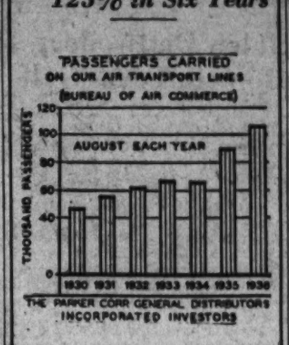
Air Travel Gains 125% in Six Years



Boston, Mass., Oct. 22.—The number of passengers carried on our air transport lines in August was 18 per cent greater than a year ago and went up 125 per cent over August, 1930, while those the air express carried was 26 times greater. Unfavorable weather conditions are less of a factor, for last year 93 per cent of the scheduled flight miles were actually flown.

Excess Reserves Gain $60,000,000

Excess reserves of Federal Reserve system member banks were estimated by the Federal Reserve Board yesterday at $2,130,000,000 for the week ended October 21, an increase of $60,000,000 over the previous week.

The rise in excess reserves, increasing the Nation's pool of potential credit, resulted from a $76,000,000 rise in member bank reserve balances. These balances were listed in the board's weekly condition statement at $6,693,000,000 on October 21, or $1,118,000,000 over the corresponding date a year ago.

The rise in reserve balances during the week ended October 21 was attributed to a $65,000,000 decrease in Treasury cash and deposits with Federal Reserve banks, a $5,000,000 increase in the monetary gold stock and a $19,000,000 drop in nonmember deposits and other Federal Reserve accounts.

Curb Stock Prices Decline at Close

New York, Oct. 22 (AP).—An early advance in the curb market fizzled out today and at the close most plus marks were to the credit of a small group of industrial specialties. Utilities ran into increased offerings on a moderate rise, while oils were backward. A 3-point decline in Bunker Hill & Sullivan had a depressing effect on the mining division.

Gulf Oil closed at 99, off 2⅛; American Cyanamid B, 35⅛, off ⅝; Newmont, 99, off ¾; Sunray Oil, 3, off ¼; Teck-Hughes, 5⅛, off ¼. Pittsburgh Plate Glass finished at 130, up 2¾. Apex Electric, Babcock & Wilcox, Colt's Patent Fire Arms and Duval Texas rose 1 to 2. Transactions totaled 465,000 shares, against 401,000 yesterday.

Beech Corp. to Build Airplanes in Japan

New York, Oct. 22.—The Beech Aircraft Corporation has signed a contract with Japan Air Transport Co., of Tokyo, to manufacture airplanes in that country, it was announced today by Walter H. Beech, president. The arrangements provide for building Beech Aircraft planes on a royalty basis.

The Beech Aircraft Corporation so far this year has delivered planes to Japan, France and Honduras, and now has orders for aircraft to be delivered to Argentina, New Zealand, Puerto Rico, Australia, Canada and England.

Southern Pacific Buys 29,123 Tons of Rails

Birmingham, Ala., Oct. 22 (U.P.).—S. J. Brown, general agent for the Southern Pacific Railroad, placed an order today for 29,123 tons of steel rails, involving an outlay of $1,200,000 and bringing the order backlog in the Birmingham area to more than $5,000,000.

The order went to the Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railway Co., United States Steel subsidiary, which last week announced a $29,000,000 expansion program to handle the greatest rush of orders of post-depression years.

Hardware Sales Set Seven-Year Records

New York, Oct. 21.—The recovery in hardware sales set new records, since 1929, for some manufacturers and wholesalers last month, and October shipments are equaling or exceeding the September rate. All lines not actually out of season are doing well, and on some the gain has been phenomenal, Hardware Age will say tomorrow in its market summary.

Both the early and current demand for stoves, and for house and kitchen furnishings have outrun expectations. Bicycles are still selling many weeks ahead of their supply. Toys, gift items and sleds are moving out faster than last year.

Electric Revenues Gain 6.6 Per Cent in Year

New York, Oct. 22.—Total revenues from consumers of the electric light and power industry in August were $169,636,200, an increase of 8.7 per cent over August, 1935, the Edison Electric Institute reported today.

For the 12 months ended August 31 total revenues were $2,011,702,800 against $1,886,683,100 in the preceding 12 months, an increase of 6.6 per cent.

SEC Suspends Mining Issue For Omissions

Delaware Corporation Is Charged With "Untrue Statements."

By the Associated Press.

The Securities and Exchange Commission issued an order yesterday suspending effectiveness of a registration statement filed by the Mining and Development Corporation of Wilmington, Del. The statement covered 3,250,000 shares of $1 par value common stock and the action was taken after the corporation had submitted several amendments to the original registration statement, all of which the commission regarded as unsatisfactory.

The commission's findings took exception to 15 items in the statement which, it charged, contained "untrue statements of material facts and omits to State material facts required to be stated therein and material facts necessary to make statements therein not misleading."

In a 21-page "findings and opinion," the commission said the registration statement disclosed that almost 80 per cent of the 3,225,000 shares now outstanding were held in a voting trust, of which the two controlling trustees are August Heckscher and Floyd de L. Brown, both of New York City.

The shares now in this voting trust were issued originally in 1934 to the registrant's predecessor, Golden Center Mines, Inc. The principal assets consist of interests in three gold mining properties in Oregon and in a tin mine in Bolivia, the commission said.

Consolidated Film.

The Securities Commission also said yesterday that Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., had withheld certain information from stockholders' action on a recapitalization plan. Acting, the commission said, to remedy the situation, it made public findings in regard to earnings which it said Herbert J. Yates, president of the company, had failed to disclose to stockholders, although asked to do so by the commission.

Preliminaries In Play Contest Are Concluded

J. C. C., Eckington Players and University Women Present Entries.

The fifth and final preliminary contest in the 1936 one-act-play tournament, conducted by the Community Center Department, was held last night at Roosevelt High School, with the Jewish Community Center, the Eckington Players and the American Association of University Women offering their entries.

"Gloria Mundi," a study of inmates in an insane asylum, by Patricia Brown, directed by Morris Arkin, was the Jewish Community Center entry, with Arthur Westover the doctor in charge of the institution. Sylvia Selbin, Esther Levett, Ethel Gottlieb, Anna Ehrlich and Sidney Binder were the patients, severally unbalanced.

Marie Moore Forrest directed the Eckington Players in "A Flitche of Bacon," by Eleanor H. Hinkley, a commentary on a bachelor's unbelief in the substantiality of wedded bliss. Sam Z. Schwartz was the country squire, with Chauncey Davis and Elinor Evans the yokel spouses. Rhodes K. Scherer, M. McDowell, Charles Cook, Robert McBeth and Vernon Lyden were the other players.

The comedy of love and somnambulism by George O. Riggs and Mannix Walker, "Not Tonight," was offered by the former coeds, with Mrs. D. Carlson and Alice Jewell directing. Margaret Graham and Guest Artist David Proffit were the juveniles, with Mrs. R. R. Tinkham, Guest Artist E. Earle Ferguson, and Mary J. Vaccaro the members of the peculiar family. W. A. W.

Following conclusion of the last play in the preliminary contest, Judges Denis E. Connell and A. J. Bier selected finalists for tomorrow night's program.

The judges' decisions, alphabetically arranged, were "Fixins," by Paul Green, presented by the Langley Lambs; "The Flattering Word," by George Kelly, presented by the Troupers of East Washington Community Center; "Gloria Mundi," by Patricia Brown, presented by the Jewish Community Center, and "Not Tonight," by George O. Riggs and Mannix Walker, presented by the players of the American Association of University Women.

Knox Assails Foe's 'Dodging' of Issues

Toledo, Ohio, Oct. 22 (AP).—Col. Frank Knox, Republican Vice Presidential nominee, tonight pointed to President Roosevelt's recent Detroit speech as supporting Knox's repeated claim the President is campaigning without disclosing what he will do if re-elected.

"What did the President mean," Knox asked in an address prepared for delivery here, "when he said in his Detroit speech there were a thousand and one things yet to be done. There are a lot of things, but what are they?"

"Nobody knows. * * * This is the first campaign in our history in which one of the candidates is running on the platform of 'I know, but I ain't gonna tell.'"

The Republican plans, Knox said on the other hand, are "plain."

"There is no NRA up our sleeve," he added, "and no plan to crack down on anybody."

Escaped Woman Convict Sought in West Virginia

Detroit, Oct. 22 (AP).—John H. Grogan, chief deputy United States marshal, announced today that Federal agents are hunting in the West Virginia hills for Miss Margaret Allen, who escaped as he was taking her to the National Reformatory for Women at Alderson, W. Va.

Grogan said Miss Allen, who pleaded guilty in Federal court here to conspiracy in connection with a $64,000 bank robbery, crawled through a train window and fled at Charleston, W. Va.

The Black Automatic

By William Byron Mowery.

Flood fairly ran up the slope.

Noel watched, out of the corner of his eye. Twice Flood jerked his head around and looked back; and when he had scrambled inside his tent he whirled around and stood wide legged behind the mosquito door, staring down at the man on the sunny bowlder.

Noel smiled, a hard mirthless smile. Flood probably would figure out the truth of this matter, after a while; but meantime the man would have a bad hour, and he would never get back his usual jaunty assurance.

"You're not so hard to crack open, Flood." Noel apostrophized him. "You're just a slinging killer, with your poison and machine guns; and like all your tribe you're yellow."

He felt that he had Flood going, and these other men too. If he could just sit tight and wait and play a poker game with their fears, he wolud win in spite of having no cards worth mentioning. A few more incidents like this caribou steak, a little more tightening of the screws, a good dose of panic with a dash of terror in it, and one of those men would come sneaking around to him with a crown confession.

Around midafternoon, while he was preparing himself a mug of tea and potatoes and caribou jerky stew, a red Bellanca with a badly spluttering engine droned into sight up south, lit splashly a thousand yards off shore and taxied into the pier.

Thomkins warped the Bellanca head-on against the planking, got out his tools and set to work on the motor. With dufflebag and a small locked pouch, Strap started up the slope for the way cabin.

Noel began making more tea and slicing more jerky into a pan. In his aloneness there at Manitou it was good to have the happy-go-lucky Strap as human company. Over the little post, outwardly so peaceful and quiet, hung an air of taut expectancy that weighted on him, and he welcomed any break in the strain.

"Hello, you lucky musrat!" Strap greeted him, breezing in. "Say, for a nickel I'd souse you in the river. I combed that suave muskeg for three days, last week, and wore out a motor looking for you and Harla. You stick to the main drags hereafter, or us other pilots'll strain you through a sieve."

He tossed his hat in one direction, dufflebag in another, laid the pouch on a bunk, and caught sight of the steaming bowl of stew which Noel had put on the table for himself. "Right on the dot for dinner! Dandy! Been bucking squalls and balky engine all the way from Chipewyan, and I'm so hungry I could wipe my face with the slack of my stummick." He plopped down at the table and attacked the stew and potatoes. "This was mine, wasn't it? Sure it was—no fellow would ever cook up such a bum dog feed for himself, would he? Tastes like rubber heels goolash. But I don't mind, I'm that hungry."

"I notice. You'd better be careful with that knife—its pretty sharp and you might cut your mouth."

"Calling me backwoods, huh? Say, fellow, I've eat in places where they'd take one look at you and wouldn't even let you in the door."

"I don't go to those places where they look at you through the door. By the way, what's wrong with that Bellanca down there?—except the fact that it's got you for a pilot?"

"Is thaaat so? Say, if I'd just cracked up a ship in a mus'rat swamp, I'd keep on real low rev about other fellows' piloting. I don't know what's wrong with that motor. Jack's finding out."

"Where are you headed for, or don't you know that?"

"We're beating hell'n tanbark for Aklavik. Due there this evening with some vaccine. In that pouch. We'll play billy hell getting there before tomorrow, if Jack has to take that motor down."

"What's the trouble at Aklavik?"

"Just a coupla cases of smallpox. The mounted has clamped on a tight quarantine, and no danger of a spread." He paused, looked up. "Say, Noel, I ran into Harla down the slope just now, and what was she driving at about that weather book?"

A little startled, Noel turned around from the stove, where he was preparing a warm meal for Thomkins. "What did she say, Strap?"

"Well she asked me if I ever told you to get that old manuel from Jimmy's cabin. She acted queer, sort of all torn up, and I didn't know what was what, so I craw fished and told her I didn't remember."

"Good. Thanks, Strap. Did she have anything else to say?"

"I hope! She blazed at me! 'You're lying. I can see it in your face. Then she backed me up against that fur press there by the bay, and, boy, did she read me a riot act!"

"What about?"

"That Diomede. She said: 'You saw that plane at McMurray. You know it was Jimmy's ship. Don't you lie to me!' Then she sailed into you. Said you stole that plane. Said you'd done something—she didn't know what—to Jimmy. Noel, she came an inch of saying flat out that you put Jimmy away."

"Good Lord! What did you say to that, Strap?"

"Me? Why, I couldn't let her get by with charges like that. I stuck up for you. I was so flabbergasted that I forgot all about you telling me to keep mum. I said. Why, Harla, he didn't steal that plane. He bought it from Jimmy in Winnipeg—"

Noel dropped the tin plate he was holding. "What? You admitted it was Jimmy's ship? Strap!"

"What's the matter, partner? Did I spill some beans for you?"

"It—it's all right, I guess." Noel managed, badly jarred by this calamitous turn. Harla knew now at last that the plane had been Jimmy's. At last she had positive proof linking him to her brother. Her suspicions now had something solid to go on.

He was not personally afraid of those suspicions. At any time he could blow them to pieces with a word. But he was afraid for his hunt. All day he had been telling himself, "If I can only keep Harla out of this." Now he could not possibly keep her out. She was going to force his hand. When she did, goodby to this cool promising game he was playing.

In the windy darkness Noel heard, or thought he heard, cautious footsteps on the gravel path out the slope. The sound seemed to be drawing nearer.

In the certain knowledge that within this hour Flood was going to loose calamity at him, he had got out of the way cabin into the safety of the night. But he had not gone far—he wanted to watch the place and see what happened. Sitting in lee of the boulder where he had sunned himself that day, he was waiting in the dark and wondering what brand of annihilation Flood would try this time.

A small storm, mostly wind but with an occasional spatter of rain and sleet, had blown in from the Arctic Ocean that evening. The thick pail of clouds scudding out of the north had brought on the twilight earlier than usual, and the dark was intense.

He was glad of the storm. The waves were too rough for Flood's Albatross to get away, and so Harla was reasonably safe tonight.

All But Three Commercial Banks Now Insured, Galleher Says.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., Oct. 22.—Ninety-nine per cent of the depositors in 323 operating commercial banks in Virginia have their funds insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, John Galleher, State director for the National Emergency Council, reported today.

"Total deposits of these insured banks amounted to $525,000,000 on June 30, 1936, of which it is estimated that about 62 per cent was covered by insurance.

"But since the greater majority of depositors had less than $5,000 in their accounts (the insurable maximum for individual depositors), it is estimated that 99 per cent of the depositors in those insured are fully protected.

The director pointed out that three commercial banks in the State had been "forced to cease operations," since the FDIC became effective January 1, 1934. He compared this with 158 suspensions in the preceding 13 years.

Of the three banks closed in the past two years and ten months in this State, Galleher said, "one was insured."

"Deposits in this institution," he declared, "totaled $313,000. Since a large majority had deposits of less than $5,000, it is estimated that 98 per cent of the depositors suffered no loss."

D.C. Doctors Named To Surgeon's Board

Philadelphia, Oct. 22 (AP).—Analysis of diseases of the heart and circulation by examination of the eye, which is regarded by physicians as the window to the entire body, was described today before the American College of Surgeons.

Dr. William Thornwall Davis, of George Washington University, Washington, D. C., declared that examination of the eye by looking directly into it reveals the first sign of hardening of the arteries and clews to the occurrence of other heart troubles.

Members of the board of governors elected for three years included Harry H. Kerr, Col. Albert G. Love, United States Army, and Capt. Ulys R. Webb, United States Navy, all of Washington.

Virginian Sentenced To 21 Years for Murder

Gate City, Va., Oct. 22 (AP).—A jury in Scott County Circuit Court today convicted Baud Williams, 33, of first degree murder, in the slaying of Mitchell Falin, 26, and fixed his punishment at 21 years in prison. Falin was killed several weeks ago in a section 12 miles southeast of here, described by officers as "Hell's Half Acre."

Williams testified he was at his mother's home when Falin was mortally wounded in front of William's own home, but Circuit Judge E. T. Carter admitted as evidence Falin's dying statement naming Williams as the man who fired a shotgun charge into him.

Contract Bridge

By Mrs. Ely Culbertson.

A Partial Count.

When counting out a hand it is not always necessary to get a complete picture of an opponent's hand. Sometimes it is enough to know about one or two suits. In today's hand South found out about West's holding in the minor suits and easily found the right play for his contract.

South, dealer.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
1 N T	Pass	3 N T	Pass
Pass	Pass

West opened the Queen of diamonds and declarer won with the Ace. He returned a small heart. West ducked and East captured the ten with the King. East returned the eight of diamonds, and dummy won with the King. At this point South had his first item of information—that West had started with a four-card diamond suit, the eight being East's highest card in the suit his partner had led.

Declarer returned to his hand with a club to lead another heart. Had West played the Ace, declarer would have had a very easy time of it. But West carefully played low and dummy's Jack held the trick.

The next step was to try out the club suit. Declarer cashed the Ace of clubs, West discarding a low spade. This marked West with an original holding of eight cards in the major suits. South did not care whether or not they included the Queen of spades. By leading a diamond and allowing West to take his two diamonds, he could be sure of his contract. For if West also cashed his Ace of hearts, declarer would be able to make the Queen of hearts; and if West led a spade, South would make three spade tricks without the necessity of taking a spade finesse.

Spain's Friends Assail 'Attack' Of Father Ryan

By the Associated Press.

The American Friends of Spanish Democracy last night called upon President Roosevelt and Chairman James A. Farley of the Democratic National Committee to disavow remarks by the Right Rev. John A. Ryan which it interpreted as "attacking the government of Spain."

The organization said the remarks were made in an address by Father Ryan in a recent radio talk and subsequently were published in a pamphlet "bearing the imprint of the Democratic National Committee." The organization said Father Ryan, professor at Catholic University, expressed "an 'unhesitating' preference for Italian fascism as against Russian communism."

In letters to the President and Farley, the organization said:

"Not only in the interest of international understanding and amity, but equally in the interest of truth itself, we call upon you to act swiftly to disabuse the minds of a rapidly widening circle of people reading the pamphlet of the suspicion that you or your Administration or your political leaders are in sympathy with the views voiced by Father Ryan."

Morgan Firm Sues For Debt Priority

By the Associated Press

J. P. Morgan & Co., private banking firm, asked the Supreme Court yesterday for priority over the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Railroad Credit Corporation in a claim for $5,850,000 against the Missouri Pacific Railroad.

The railroad in 1935 brought a debtor proceeding under the bankruptcy act in the Federal District Court in Missouri. The court ordered the Morgan claim grouped in the same class with an RFC claim for $23,144,800 and a Railroad Credit claim for $3,775,000.

The banking firm contended that "a private banking firm, whose first responsibility is to its depositors, and whose primary concern must be to collect its claims as promptly and as fully as possible, is distinctly different from emergency organizations, governmental in character, one of whose chief purposes is to aid railroads in time of financial distress."

Film Operator Asks Blue Law Suit Dismissal

Judge Duncan to Withhold Ruling in Alexandria Pending State Brief.

Judge James R. Duncan in police court yesterday was asked to dismiss a "blue laws" violation charge against a theater owner for showing motion pictures on Sunday. The brief was filed by Attorney Charles Henry Smith as a test of the law.

The case will not be decided until another brief to be filed by Commonwealth's Attorney Albert V. Bryan in support of the Virginia statute is studied, Judge Duncan said.

Meanwhile, the Willard Pierpont chapter, Woman's Christian Temperance Union, added its protest against Sunday motion pictures in Alexandria to that made recently by the Alexandria Ministerial Association.

Smith, in his brief, said, "Every such case must be decided in light of the circumstances, desires and opportunities of the people of the community," adding that athletic games at which admission is charged may now be seen in Alexandria on Sunday, and that beer and tobacco may be bought where the same law is applicable.

He added that motion picture theaters are operated on Sunday in Richmond, Norfolk, Roanoke and nearby Fairfax County, and referred to the easy access to Washington theaters.

Judge Duncan yesterday imposed fines of $50 each on two colored men, nonresidents, on a charge of carrying a loaded shotgun on the Sabbath Day. There is a Virginia law against carrying a loaded shotgun on the Sabbath. For the first time in many years it was cited yesterday by Judge Duncan.

Charles Holland, alias Hollins, in addition to the fine of $50 for the loaded-gun charge, was given 30 days for felonious assault with a knife on Thomas Stokes. The second man fined $50 was Owen Hall, 23.

The dedicatory address at the Alexandria Boys Club last night was given by the Rev. Dr. John Paul Tyler, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. The club building was given by Dr. and Mrs. Robert South Barrett. Funds for equipment and operation were obtained by subscription from a group of interested citizens.

The program was: Selection, Ray Francis Orchestra; invocation, the Rev. Leonard J. Koster, patsor of St. Rita's Catholic Church, Mount Ida; presentation of Dr. and Mrs. Barrett; presentation of the deed of trust and club to board of directors of the institution; acceptance on behalf of the board by Roger C. Sullivan, the president; acceptance on behalf of the city of Alexandria by Mayor E. C. Davison; acceptance on behalf of the club by H. W. Reid, jr.; vocal selections, Mrs. Evelyn Howard Sheridan; selection, orchestra; dedicatory address, Dr. Tyler; selection, orchestra; benediction, the Rev. A. Lobel, Congregation Agudas Achim.
